In this respect the SENTINEL disclaims any intention or opposing those salaries, but we believe no proposition of this kind should be adopted without inquiry. The salaries of county officers are established by the Board of Supervisors at their session in January, 1877, are as follows:

Sheriff	$100
Clerk	200
Treasurer	250
Judge of Probate	175

In the case of the Sheriff it is said that the large amount paid deputies last fall was an unreasonable allowance. It may be. But this cannot be called wholly a part of the Sheriff's salary. If the Board were prodigal in this matter, how may he very properly asked to restrict such allowances in the future.

We are at loss to know the fact that the business in the office of Treasurer and Clerk has rapidly increased of late, because of the organization of new Townships, and the general business depression which seems to call for a reduction of their salaries brings more labor to the large increase of returns of land delinquent for taxes. For instance: In 1875 the Treasurer of Kewaguine returned to the County Treasurer, from a territory embracing two and one-half Townships, 130 descriptions of land delinquent for taxes. In 1876 the same officer returned 124 descriptions from one and one-half townships. This instance only illustrates the increase of business which from the same causes comes to the Treasurer's office from all sources under his jurisdiction.

Formerly the Prosecuting Attorney, in addition to his Court duties, was only legal counsel for county officers, and he received $100 salary. Under a resolution of the Board adopted January, 1877 he is required to give legal advice to every Township, highway and school officer in the county, and his salary was fixed at $250.

In times of high taxes we are apt to look at once to a reduction of county expenses for relief, without stopping to consider where the greatest weight of the burden really comes from. In no Township in the county is the aggregate amount of township, highway and school tax less than double the county tax apportioned to that township; and we can point to more than one township where the county tax is only about one seventh of the total tax spread upon the rolls.

The total amount raised for county purposes last year was $4,558. Of this amount about one-fifth—$975—or 14½ mills on each dollar valuation, is paid to county officers.

Where does the remaining four-fifths go?

Would it not be well to petition the Board of Supervisors to look into the matter with a view to stopping the big leaks first?

We are in favor of stopping every unnecessary expense in county matters, but no good cause suffers from investigation.

STEAMERS FOR CHARLEVOIX.—In consequence of the change which has been made in Western Transportation Company affairs, the propeller Fountain City will ply between Buffalo and Duluth. Under this arrangement we shall be deprived of Capt. Gibson and his fine steamer. It is expected, however, that the propeller Idaho will stop here as usual. We are authorized to state that one of Goodrich's sidewheel steamers will ply between Chicago and Cheboygan the coming season, and stop regularly at Charlevoix and Petoskey. This will give us weekly communication with Chicago and Milwaukee on one end of the route, and Mackinac and Cheboygan on the other. The steamer Van Buskle is being put in shape for her next season's business and will be on the route earlier than usual, no doubt

Extension of Time for Payment of Taxes.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

SIR—In times like the present, when we are all put to our wit's ends to make end meet, it should be our individual aim to be as economical as possible, and incur no expense that we can avoid.

It is our duty to do so as private individuals, and equally the duty of those in public office to be careful that they do not involve their constituents in any extravagance.

Now that we are about to have an extra session of the Board of Supervisors for the purpose of extending the time for the payment of taxes, inasmuch as the county is considerable expense, is it not well enough for us to inquire whether all has been done by our public officers that might have been, to avert such necessity?

Have the Township Treasurers done all they possibly could, and what the law required in their efforts to collect the taxes in their respective Townships? If so, then it would be reasonable and just to grant an extension. A Treasurer, before he can be justified in asking for an extension should at least call upon the tax payers once. Has such been the case? I think not.

In some cases their reasons are that it took them longer to settle with the Railroad Land Department than they had anticipated, consequently they have not had time to collect all the individual tax. Would it not have been just as well to have made an effort to collect the resident tax, and thus made a good use of their time?

In many cases the oldest men of the towns have not been called upon. How does a Treasurer know that those taxes could not be collected? And yet, in the face of such facts they ask for an extension of time. In many cases where Treasurers will have to return non-resident books they might have had the money in their treasuries, but for some reason best known to themselves, when called on with a view to paying the amount they have paid no heed to the matter.

If the Treasurers have exhausted all the means prescribed by the law, within the time so prescribed, then they are justified in asking for an extension; but if not, then such extension would be burdening the county for their neglect. Not only that, but it works injustice to the town and townships that have paid their taxes, in compelling them to pay their equal share of the tax so raised. Will not such a tax be an injustice to the Township of of Evangeline, that has already made returns?

Treasurers are to blame for not being more prompt and energetic. Instead of trying to force collections, they have been in the habit of encouraging the people to hope for the extension they have now asked for. What better proof have they for getting the money for the thirty days to come?

However it may turn out, let us hope that the towns and individuals in whose favor the extension is asked will not be the first to raise the cry next year of heavy county taxes

YOURS,
TAX PAYER.

CONSISTENCY is generally believed to be a jewel. The retired veteran who inaugurated the movement to reduce the expenses of the government at the small cost, two years ago laid, a county office receiving a salary, all things considered, as large as the present incumbent of the same office receives; but it was considered by the veteran as too little then. It would have been well for the champion of an over taxed people to have cultivated his philanthropy when he was active in the dual capacity of county officer and agent for a blank book manufactury, receiving a handsome commission on all sales made to the county. Investigation will disclose the fact that there are expensive blank books in the office which was occupied by the veteran, which a pen has never yet touched, and which will remain unused for some time. It may be that that this kind of business will strike a popular chord and restore lost prestige, but it would sound better if it had half the ring of pure metal. We have read in sacred history of the golden being brought to life, but we venture the assertion that it was generally a cord not kind of a corpse that was revived.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A NUMBER of petition favoring the remonetization of silver were presented in the Senate, on the 4th, as was also a petition from a large number of well-known citizens of the City and State of New York, urging both the appointment of time to confer in Northern China, and suggesting the appointment of a Commission from residents of China to act in connection with the United States Minister in investing and distributing the relief contributions amounting to the munificent sum of money received from China in 1868, as mementos for the destitution of certain provinces in and by reason of the suffering Mr. Kasson spoke in opposition to and Mr. Rowe in favor of the Silver bill, and Mr. Sherman submitted an amendment to the bill. . . . In the House several petitions and resolutions were presented and referred, including resolutions from Boston and New York, asking Congress to adopt such measures of relief for the sufferers in the Ebenezer in the United States. A bill was introduced (H. R. 1) to provide for the distribution of special terms of the Circuit and District Courts in the District of Mississippi, on the second Monday of March and the third Monday of October. A bill was also introduced to provide for the erection of a public building at Marquette, Mich. . . . Among the bills introduced and referred were one to Commissioner of Internal Revenue. . . . Mr. Matthews, of Indiana, introduced and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The discussion on the Silver bill was resumed and continued in the Senate, on the 6th inst. The debate, making a lengthy argument in its favor, and Mr. Kasson speaking in opposition. Resolutions of regret at the sickness and condition and state of efficiency of the lifesaving service on the coast of North Carolina, and concerning the circumstances of the wreck of the Huron and the inefficiency and neglect of officers of navigation on that coast, were agreed to, and a resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information in relation to the wreck. A bill was introduced and referred making the Department of Agriculture an Executive Department. The report on the contested election case in the Fourth Kentucky District was presented and discussed.

A BILL was passed in the Senate, on the 7th, to grant taxes on insolvent savings banks. A resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Appropriations to make inquiry as to whether the amount appropriated for the Freedmen's Bureau, Schools and Asylum was sufficient to enable the Bureau to meet the claims in the Pension Bureau. Suggestions were made and additional bills introduced. A bill was taken up, and Messrs. Bayard and Johnston spoke in favor of the remonetization of silver. The amended election case of Yeaman vs. Dockery, from the Fourth District of Kentucky, was taken up in the House, and the majority report in favor of Dockery, holding his seat two years, 126 days after which the report of the minority in favor of the contestant, Yeaman, was accepted. He was followed by Mr. Wigginton, who spoke in favor of the seat. . . .

SEVERAL petitions were presented and referred in the Senate, on the 8th. The next bill was further debated. Mr. Hill opposed its passage, though favoring a modified remonetization bill, and Mr. Sherman replied in favor of legal-tender quality, and Mr. Wilson in favor of the present bill. . . . In the House on the 8th Mr. Blaine spoke against the Bland bill, and favored a double standard of equalized silver and gold. Adjourned to the 10th. . . . On the 10th the House passed a bill (H. R. 4,307) for the payment of claims adjusted by the late Commissioner of Claims. Messages from the President and memorials and reports were made to the Senate. . . . Mr. Hill spoke in favor of the bill favoring the coinage of the silver dollar. Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, followed in opposition. . . . In the House the bill (H. R. 4,307) for the payment of claims adjusted by the late Commissioner of Claims was taken up, and Mr. Blaine, who reported it, explained its provisions. A bill was introduced to provide for a survey of and estimates for a ship canal, with private aides and bottom, from deep, fish water near the mouth of the Mississippi River to St. Louis, Mo., with branches to Pittsburgh, Chicago, St. Paul and Omaha. The Military Academy Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

DOMESTIC.

THE paying teller of the Bank of North America, of New York, has confessed to a defalcation of over $100,000, about $16,000 of which was recovered, on the 6th, and the individual was put under arrest.

A MAN named Joseph Henry Shrack, who pretended to die and come to life again in Philadelphia, some weeks ago, is pronounced by the Philadelphia coroner a fraud and a humbug. The church of which he is a member has given his case thorough investigation, and arrived at the conclusion that his suspended animation was wholly simulated.

The subcontract for the [illegible] loan had reached nearly $3,000,000 up to the 7th of this month.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 8th says that Vice-President Wheeler and Speaker Randall were vigorously enforcing the rule forbidding the sale of liquor in the basement of the Capitol.

A DISASTROUS tornado struck Augusta, Ga., on the evening of the 7th. The market-house was demolished, as were also other public and private structures. Several persons lost their lives.

AT New York, on the 9th, a young lady, whose alleged insanity had been the subject of inquiry by three Commissioners since the 5th of last December, was declared to be of sound mind, and to have never been insane, although she had been confined in an asylum for over seven years. Her family testified that she was insane. It appeared from the testimony that, in case she was adjudged a lunatic, her brothers and sisters would receive about $300,000 more from their father's estate, as she would be unable to make a will disposing of her share. The jury found that all her brothers and sisters approved of, and some of them were instrumental in, the confinement of their sister in the asylum.

A LETTER was read from Archbishop Wood, in the Catholic churches in Manchuk, Pa., on the 10th, in which the recent alleged taking of a young woman from the dead, by one of the Catholic priests, was pronounced to be a delusion and pious fraud. The Archbishop further stated that a repetition of anything of the sort in the Diocese would be visited by the severest censure authorized by the laws of the Church.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

EX-STATE SENATOR HARRY GENET, one of the New York Tammany Ring fugitives, surrendered to the authorities, on the 4th and was held in the sum of $25,000.

THE Judiciary Committee of the National House of Representatives on the 5th, took a vote on the proposition for the Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution as presented and advocated in the late National Female Suffrage Convention. The vote on the proposition was: Yeas—Messrs. Lysle, Frye, Conger, Butler and Lapham—5. Nays—Messrs. Kimmi, Herndlige, Stenger, McMahon and Culbertson—5. Mr. Harris, of Virginia, Price is opposed to female suffrage, was absent. There was no probability whatever that the committee would at any time thereafter take favorable action on the subject.

THE jury, in the case of Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, on trial for conspiracy and forgery in causing to be electored the ballot-box in the fall of 1868, rendered a verdict of guilty, on the evening of the 7th after being out about one hour. The jury was then discharged and the prisoner remanded to await sentence. Mr. Wilkeson still in confinement, but the bonds required of him had been reduced to $10,000.

THE Michigan Greenback State Convention assembled at Jackson, on the 7th, nearly every county in the State being represented. The platform adopted calls for the repeal of the Resumption act, the remonetization of silver; the National debt to be paid in greenbacks, unless coin is specially called for in the law, and was unanimously endorsed. A bill was introduced and referred making the Department of Agriculture an Executive Department. The report on the contested election case in the Fourth Kentucky District was presented and discussed.

EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 26, - - 1878.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Feb. 22, 1878.

The death of the Pope continues to receive the most intensified attention. The memorial service, which in all the Catholic churches are still being held with great pomp and circumstance, are crowded with the farthest, while most few of the more liberal Protestants have referred to the dead Pontiff from their pulpits kindly and respectfully. Quite a number of Catholic merchants throughout the city have draped the fronts of their stores, and Barclay street, which is the centre of Catholic publishing and church ornament selling, has quite a depressing and funereal air. The one American Cardinal, McCloskey, is now enroute for Rome, where he will cast his vote for the next occupant of St. Peter's chair. In the early part of 1870 I spent some time in Rome and saw the Pope quite often. He had not then succumbed to the infirmities which in his latest years kept him almost constantly a prisoner in his palace, nor had the shadow of temporal power in which he gloried, been entirely taken from him; and the progress of his sumptuous coach through the streets of Rome was always amid the cheers or kneeling salutations of a populace which only a few months later were to welcome the entrance and the sway of Victor Emmanuel. To add to the Papal glories at that time, the Ecumenical Council, the result of whose deliberations was that firebrand dogma of infallibility, was sitting in one of the aisles of St. Peter's, and was daily the admiration of the vast throngs that collected to witness the imposing procession of red-gowned cardinals passing to or from their solemn and secret session. I was much impressed with the serene and smiling face of the venerable man whose hand was always raised in benediction as he passed, and cannot wonder at the affectionate respect with which the Catholic Church regards his memory.

One of the oldest incidents of the week was the abduction of Henry Clews, the well known banker of this city, who went through bankruptcy a couple of years ago, and presumably made some enemies thereby. The perpetrators of this bold outrage are not positively known, for, strangely enough, Mr Clews is very reticent, and will not throw any light on the mysterious occurrence. From all that can be learned it appears that it was the intention of Mr. Clews' captors to get him away from the city and conceal him for the purpose of extorting money from himself or his friends. They were so far successful as to get him to the Grand Central Depot, where detectives, who had been hastily put upon their track, found and rescued the distinguished victim.

The new statement of the Ætna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, issued, and goes far toward justifying the growing opinion that it is the strongest life company in America. The fact that two or three others have larger gross assets is quite immaterial; for, other things being equal, that company is the best for policy holders whose surplus bears the largest ratio to its assets. The Ætna, I believe, occupies this enviable position having, by the severest standard, over four and a third millions of surplus in a little over twenty four millions of assets. But other things are not equal, by any manner of means. While some other Connecticut companies have developed a weakness sufficiently alarming to cause the legislature to appoint a commission to make, at the expense of the State, a thorough inquisition into life insurance throughout Connecticut, the Ætna has passed through this ordeal in a manner to elicit a long commendatory report from the commission the gist of which is contained in one sentence, which says that "it is not only solvent, but financially sound, and is under the management of officers and directors of large experience, sound judgment, and unblemished character. We believe with out doubt that it is entitled to the entire confidence of policy holders and the public."

It may interest any policy holders of the late Security Insurance Company, under whose eyes this letter may come, to learn that its ex president Case, who was lately sentenced to State's Prison, has obtained a new trial and is at large on bail. As such things go it is very doubtful whether he ever sees the inside of a prison cell again.

What is to be done with his money I don't ask this on my own account—in fact it is extremely odd on that a newspaper man has any difficulty in answering the question so far as his own personal income is concerned—but only on general principles. If he puts it in a bank the bank burns. If he buys real estate the chances are that he will have to sell to give the property away for the taxes. If he invests in railroad bonds he is apt to have the pleasure of watching them sink gracefully down to ninety two degrees below zero. If in Credit Mobilier he may put his wealth into currency, and then, like Mr J. Raymond of Staten Island, hides it away to the amount of $3,000 in his garret beyond the reach or the suspicion of burglars, chuckling the while over having cut the legs of the rascally locks and the tax collector—even then he must not feel too happy, for he may yet wake up some early morning as did the Mr Barlow aforesaid on Sunday last, put in time to escape with a whole skin and very little else from a conflagration which at once wipes out his home and his treasure. My question is thus seen to be a knotty one, and one which by its very knottiness, and one which by its very difficulties ought perhaps to reconcile us poor folks to our lot.

St. Valentine's day is a day of sermon and strong language to the private and barkwicked New York letter carrier. Perhaps cupids and sweethearts stand quite as to many extra carriers of weight, and to many extra bell pulls and stair climbings. He does not therefore gush much over the time honored observance. The clerks in the post office say that the number sent through the mails this year is much smaller than in years past. The manufacturers on the other hand claim that their business has been remarkably good. Two houses in this city have turned out this season nearly 30,000 gross, or over 1,000,000 valentines, ranging in price from a fraction of a cent to forty dollars. It is evident that the fool killer has not been attending to business as he ought.

Since the wreck of the whaler "Resolute" years ago there has been no authenticated story of starvation and cannibalism equal to that of the crews of a number of sailors who have just arrived in this port, on a vessel which on Jan. 31st picked them up from the wreck of the schooner "Stellman," which put out of Charleston, S. C., on Dec. 17th. The ill-fated vessel was driven about by gales, which set in at the commencement of her voyage, till she was disabled and lost all her boats, so that there was no possible chance for the crew of seven men to escape from the helpless hull. After days of drifting the provisions gave out and no sail hove in sight. There was fresh water aboard which kept all hand alive for a few days. Then all but five died and the survivors continued in their horrible suffering until they were near from starvation. A vessel neared, during which one of their number, a negro, was shot dead, whereupon the survivors fell upon him and made a hideous meal from his remains. The details of the story are too terrible to mention. The captain of the vessel which at length rescued the famishing wretches, says that when he took them on board, they were barely able to walk or speak. The latter age not allowed to leave the boat that brought them here until it is determined what legal action, if any, shall be taken in the matter.

Among the amusements of the hour I don't know of anything else so worthy of notice on account of novelty and unique attraction as the "Congress of Beauty and Culture," which some enterprising genius announces to be held at Gilmore's Garden. The promoter of this affair, cautious of the success of the various baby shows, cat shows, dog shows, poultry shows, and the like, with which we have been favored lately, removed the idea of confining them all. So he advertised in the papers for 1,000 beautiful young ladies to meet for a certain number of days at the locally named and compete for some thousands of dollars which he announced would be distributed at the close of the "Congress" among the fortunate damsels whom the visiting public should adjudge to be pre-eminently lovely. The result was a collection of some fifty or sixty forlorn looking young women, a rowdy crowd of visitors, and a general melee, in which the "Congress of Beauty and Culture" sank presumably to rise no more.

"German Syrup."

Scientific medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo W Granger.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

Senator Gordon, of Georgia, was hit by bullets six times during the Civil War.

The will of the late Chief-Justice Pearson, of North Carolina, was written in pencil. A legal gentleman's own legal business is never half attended to, any more than the feet of a shoemaker's child.

The daughters of Sec'y Schurz are great favorites of the foreign representatives who attend the receptions at the White House, as the young ladies are able to converse well in several languages.

A member of the London publishing house of Sampson, Low & Co. rushed across the English Channel in order to see Stanley and get the first chance to publish his new book about African exploration. Such enterprise was worthy of American.

It has been announced that the Rev. Dr. Seymour, Bishop-elect of Springfield, Ill., will shortly marry Miss Susan Tyng Dana, a cousin of the Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., Rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, New York.

The Territorial Enterprise, of Nevada, says of Mark Twain, that, unless he has greatly changed since he left that paper, he will not be betrayed into the indiscretion of wrong too much. It says he always avoided work as he would a pestilence.

Just as Prof. Everett, of Harvard College, was rounding off the last line of an ode of Horace during his speech at the Boston dinner at Boston, an open-mouthed waiter, turning to a companion, remarked: "I say, Jim, what a man that 'Orace Greely was!"

The Springfield Republican did not put in any black rules when Mr. Bowles died. It is good to see that this unsanctified style of expressing grief is passing away. Nothing is more horrible or in worse taste than a newspaper with its column rules upside down.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A former schoolmate of Wagner, who lives in St. Louis, speaking of the early life of the German composer, says that "he tried to learn to play the piano, which at that time was becoming the popular instrument, but could not. He could not learn to run scales, and if one will notice, in all of his music to-day there are no runs. He had such a detestation of them, though his inability to master them that he would not write any."

Of Gail Hamilton, a lady correspondent of the Albany Journal writes from Washington: "I met her at Mrs. Postmaster-General Key's reception. Miss Dodge was dressed handsomely in a brown matelasse wedding suit, with rich satin train. She is said to be an exceedingly pleasant person to know in the same house, but her manner toward transient feminine acquaintances is indifferent, not to say superbious. She likes to talk with men. She is plain-looking, but piquant in every snap of her wilful eyes and every loss of her cedarous nose."

Vexations of Diplomatic Intercourse.

Minister Conly, the United States representative at the Sandwich Islands, writes as follows to his newspaper, the Columbus (Ohio) Sunday Critic, concerning the irritations of diplomatic intercourse.

"Do you know what it is to the Minister to have a man-of-war visit his post? First, the Admiral sends his Staff officer to report his arrival. Then they take a drink. Then the Minister runs up his flag, and sends a dispatch to the Minister of Foreign Affairs notifying His Majesty's Government that the Admiral has arrived, and desires to salute the flag. Then His Excellency replies, and sets the time when the Admiral may shoot, and His Majesty's big guns will be all loaded, ready to reply, gun for gun. Then the bombardment takes place. Then the Admiral calls on the Minister, with his staff and all their good clothes. Then they all drink. Then the Minister goes aboard the man-of-war in his gold dress and the Admiral's vawl. Then they all drink. When he leaves the vessel, after being presented arms to, and all kinds of bother, he gets only about thirty yards away when his ears are torn and his head bursted by the big guns of the vessel firing a thirteen gun salute. The mariners have their ears hooked and their eyes on the Minister, and he is ready to take off his hat and give horribly a ghastly smile, as if he really enjoyed the honor of having his head bursted. In this way, when the Admiral comes ashore with his staff, and the Minister takes him to call upon His Majesty's Government. We go first to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who tells us when we may have an audience at the Palace to present the Admiral and other officers to His Majesty. Then we visit the other Ministers, the Governor of Oahu, the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Marshal of the Kingdom; then we take a drink. Then the Admiral invites the Minister to lunch, and they take a drink.

"Next day the Minister takes the whole party to the palace, and they are presented in due form to His Majesty. The Admiral reads a little speech, in which he tells His Majesty how glad we are to see him, and His Majesty reads a little speech, in which he replies how glad he is to see us. Then we talk awhile with all the grandees, and after backing out of the presence sign our names in a Bible book, and the Admiral hurries on board the vessel to get relieved from the pressure of his sword-belt as soon as possible. Meantime all the other Excellencies, representing every country under Heaven, have been sending notes to the Minister begging him to name the happy day when it will please the Admiral to send a tom for them to come aboard, and have a salute fired for them. Then the Frenchman always gets mad because he did not get as many guns as he thinks he ought to have had, and the Minister has three months' correspondence on his hands before that is settled. You think it is all over now? The trouble is only about to begin. There are dinners, lunch parties, dances, serenades, visits to be paid, and the dickens to pay if the foreign representatives do not receive their return calls before the week is out.

"Why, it is a positive fact, we have been living since last September within five miles of the greatest sight to be seen in the world, almost the 'Pale' or Paris, a precipice 1,later feet high, over which old Kamehamaha drove the army that conquered him; and today is the first day I have found it possible to go up and see it. That I ran away, literally, on the day before the mail closes, in order to see it even now, will I trust be a fact of some significance. I have no time to write about it, however, though I am stuffed full of its beauty and grandeur."

How to Amuse Younger Children.

It isn't always the baby you are called to nurse. There are such numbers of society as six-year-olds, as I painfully know, for such an one has just laid his head on the pillow in the room across the hall. I have to devise and search and contrive to be good company for these lively wits and limbs, indeed there on mamma's bed, after a day's tramp following a hunting party, built way to Shamaronock and over by the beach to dinner, less but for some apples found in the wood. A square of silver-perforated board and a worsted needle full of pink zephyr used to keep the little fingers busy, on rainy days, and you will find that children four years old can work their patterns for a shaving-case or a matelsbigher, with great satisfaction, particularly if it is to be a "surprise" for some baby at Christmas. That same small boy rips most of his mother's old seams for her, and never was known to cut a stitch, or to grumble over the work if he could have a cheerful talk thrown in. Children like to be useful, and feel that they are accomplishing something, and they can do more than we suppose, if they only have sensible ways of doing them. So find something for your little folks to do, if it is picking up apples or pulling weeds with you, or folding newspapers, or picking or shelling pease and berries or the currants for supper. They have some enough for it, only you must not keep them long at one thing, unless of their own accord. Twenty minutes is a long time for them to work, and you will be the wise suggesting something new as the signs of weariness begin. Always give them a little task, however, that they must finish, and put them on their pride about it, so that they will learn steadiness by degrees. Then to let them play. They need not be quiet if they do romp. And dance with them. I never saw a child that did not like to have its hands taken by an older one, and swing and loop round to a tune, the faster the better. Sawing wood, by crossing the wrists and taking hold hands, and drawing them back and forth, or wringing the dish-cloth, with songs over head, as every child knows, is fun, but beanslings are, perhaps, best for small people. They can catch a bag better than a ball, and it does not give such hard knocks. Dressing up in a cocked hat, sash and epaulets cut out of newspapers, has all the delights of a masquerade to the small fry. I know of nothing so absolutely exciting as painting small faces with colored crayons, with a cast-off rooster's feather in the hair, a shawl for a blanket, and playing Indian in earnest. Measuring lengths against the door is always entertaining, so is playing postman with a bag of letters.—Wide-Awake.

Will a Bad Daughter Make a Good Wife?

It often happens that though a man may be engaged to a girl for a long time, he really fails to reach a true understanding of her character. When he comes to marry her he finds that she is very different in disposition from what he supposed while he was playing the part of a lover. The consequence is sometimes much marital unhappiness. The husband thinks he has been deceived, and the thought irritates him. Yet the fault is usually his own, and he does not deserve sympathy. He was an unobserving lover, else his long engagement would have enabled him to find out what sort of girl she was courting. There are cases, however, where the woman artfully conceals her real disposition during the preliminary love-making, only to tear away the disguise when the knot has been tied. Here the husband should get all the compassion he bestows on people who have been swindled.

But a Southern gentleman who asks our advice in his love-affairs, and who thus states his case, cannot, if he marries his sweetheart, plead ignorance of her disposition:

"SIR. A brilliant beautiful and accomplished lady has unquestionably gained possession of the citadel of my heart. I am fully satisfied my love is reciprocated, and I would not hesitate an instant to enthrone her as the queen of my soul, but for her conduct at home, which causes me no little anxiety. She will not assist in the household duties, neither is she kind and gentle around the family circle nor to her inferiors, but indifferent to the interest of her parents. She is unquestionably deeply interested in my welfare, and, judging by her conduct (toward me) would make a faithful and loving wife. Now, sir, have I sufficient and good reasons to turn from the idol of my heart, and master my grief, or should I fulfill my desire by taking her into my keeping? If you will give this your early and earnest consideration you will confer a lasting favor upon

We are not surprised that our correspondent hesitates before embarking on the sea of matrimony with a bride who so comports herself in her father's house. If a girl neglects to assist in lifting the load of care off her mother's shoulders, has no regard to pay to her father, distrusts the servants and goes snarling about the house, the chances are ten to one that when she gets a home of her own she will make a nuisance of herself there also. Very likely she is amiable enough to our friend, for his attentions flatter her vanity; but after he had married her and moved into old story like her parents, she would probably treat him to an exhibition of the same qualities which she now displays as a careless and ungrateful daughter.

There are girls who fancy themselves so far superior to their parents that any mere privilege of enjoying their society in the house ought to be all the old people could expect of them. A sure sign of this is their contempt for the domestic duties they will be called upon to perform. While their mothers are busy with domestic duties they sit in the easiest chairs, or lie on the softest sofas, reading an elegant novel, which they fondly cherish the notion that they are very literary individuals. The household drudgery is done so that such fine ladies as they. The business of their parents is to provide them with miscellanea, and to be content with admiring their handsome appearance in the intervals of labor.

Such girls wish to get married, and therefore they are sensible enough to eligible bachelors, quickly smoothing down the frowns which alone they give to the members of their own families. A caller who doesn't give a chance of seeing how they behave as daughters, may be excused for fancying them lovely and lovable beings. Any one who does see it, is foolish if he commits himself by offering marriage to a girl that is in the case of large estates, leaving one or two assistants near the preserves, then passed the by-ways and footpaths, and finally the gates and the cross-roads and lanes which lead to the villages. If a man comes along at two o'clock in the early hour, with cartpockets without a single, he may prima facie case for searching him the advantage of wiring or netting the game is that they never encounter anything shot bleeds and stains the pocket—a suspicious sight even when empty—ingeniously contrive to escape. Without a knowledge of the poacher's man's beat and the keeper's post, the poacher can do nothing on a large scale. He has, however, little or no trouble in ascertaining those things; the laborers who do not themselves poach, sympathize generally and give information. There is reason to think that men sometimes get drunk, or sufficiently so to simulate intoxication very successfully, with the express purpose of being out all night with a good excuse, and so discovering the police-

Poaching in England.

The wire is, perhaps, the regular poacher's best implement, and ground game his most profitable source of income. Hares exist in numbers upon the downs, especially near the localities where the great coursing meetings are held, where a dozen may be kicked out of the grass in five minutes. In these districts of course the dogs are watched; but hares cannot be kept within bounds, and wander miles and miles at night, lunging daintily with their odd gait (when undisturbed) along the lines leading into the plowed fields on the lower slopes and planes. The hills, wide and almost pathless, and practically destitute of fences—where the turf leaves no trail on the short grass and elastic turf, are peculiarly favorable to illicit sport. Though apparently roaming aimlessly, hares have their regular "high-ays, or "runs;" and it is the poacher's business to discover which of these narrow paths are most beaten by continuous use. He then sets his wire, as early in the evening as compatible with safety to himself, for hares are abroad with the twilight. Long practice and delicate skill are essential to successful snaring. First, the loop itself into which the hare is to run its head must be of the exact size. If it be too small he will simply thrust it aside; if too large his body will slip through, and his hind leg will be caught; if being crooked, he draws the noose probably. Then it caught by the hind leg, the frenzied creature, mad with terror, will shriek like a human child, and a hare shrieks precisely like a human being in distress. The sound, well under stood by the poachers, will at once reveal what is going forward. Rabbits are also wired in great numbers. The loop is a trifle smaller, and should be just a span from the ground. But the ferret is the poacher's chief assistant in rambling; it takes two men, one on each side of the "clapper," and the ferret which will not "fly in" (i. e., stay in the hole and feast till overcome with sleep.

The greatest difficulty with any kind of game is to get home undiscovered with the bag. Keepers are quite aware of this; and in the case of large estates, leaving one or two assistants near the preserves, then passed the by-ways and footpaths, and finally the gates and the cross-roads and lanes which lead to the villages. If a man comes along at two o'clock in the early hour, with cartpockets without a single, he may prima facie case for searching him the advantage of wiring or netting the game is that they never encounter anything shot bleeds and stains the pocket—a suspicious sight even when empty—ingeniously contrive to escape. Without a knowledge of the poacher's man's beat and the keeper's post, the poacher can do nothing on a large scale. He has, however, little or no trouble in ascertaining those things; the laborers who do not themselves poach, sympathize generally and give information. There is reason to think that men sometimes get drunk, or sufficiently so to simulate intoxication very successfully, with the express purpose of being out all night with a good excuse, and so discovering the police-pages of these highly wrought literary productions, the wavering formulæ of some fictitious hero, or equally mythical heroine. And the same irresistible penchant for these sensational romances that has enthralled the intellects of much of our adult population, has become a kind of second nature with our rising generation. It has become woven with the very being, so that it would appear to be a necessary adjunct to their existence. They neglect the performance of their ordinary occupations and shirk the responsibilities of position or duty to indulge their propensities for such reading. It appears to carry with it a fascination, that imperceptibly steals over the senses of its votaries and chains their intellect to its dominion.

We advise parents to preclude from their homes the filthy story papers which constitute "the literature of crime," and we would warn them that when once a youth has yielded his undeveloped intellect to the subtle and poisonous influence, he endangers the safety of his intellectual aspirations. No more will he aspire to true and substantial literature; no more will his ambition prompt him to covet intellectual study; no more will he seek to make everything subservient to the increase of his intelligence and the strengthening of his godlike attributes; solid literature will no longer have any charms for him, as his tastes become submerged in the yawning gulf of degradation.

Many a young man of the brightest talents, whose career at school was unprecedented in brilliancy, has thwarted his high anticipations by the habit of reading "the literature of crime." He is, then, the solemn duty of parents and guardians to see that their sons and daughters do not read this intellectual poison which is daily poured from the press.—School and Home.

The Sort of Cigars Smoked in England.

A large number of the so-called Havana cigars which arrive in England are shipped from German ports. In a pamphlet recently published in London, some details are given of the means employed to give the cigars manufactured there a more marketable appearance.

A lighter price is, it appears, obtainable for dark than for light-colored cigars, therefore the former being about three times as large as for the latter. Unfortunately, however, owing to a great increase in the partial failure of the tobacco crops of Cuba, light-colored tobacco is much more common than dark. In order, therefore, to remedy this, the cigars made of light-colored tobacco salable at a higher price, and also to improve the appearance of the cheaper cigars, various infusions have of late been prepared and largely sold under the name of "Havana brown," "sap brown," and "colored sauce." All these preparations are now openly advertised, and directions given for using them.

Fortunately, the writer of the pamphlet referred to remarks, none of these preparations are anything particularly injurious, apart of them consisting of brown sugar and coffee. Nevertheless the manufacturer to give cigars made of the latter the appearance of good Havana cigars. The writer of the pamphlet regrets that he is not aware of any means by which the imposition can be detected; but a German paper states that if a piece of white blotting paper, saturated with diluted sal-ammoniac, is passed a few times lightly over the cigar, the coloring matter, if any has been used, will come off on it, while the natural brown of the tobacco leaf will remain. Pall Mall Gazette.

Do Insects Talk to Each Other?

"Twn ants," says Buchner, "when they are talking together stand with their heads opposite each other, working their sensitive feelers in the liveliest manner, and tapping each other's heads." Nungent, examining a female ant, "has often," says the English naturalist Jesse, "placed a small great caterpillar in the neighborhood of an ant's nest. It is immediately seized by an ant, which calls in the assistance of a friend before ineffectual efforts to drag the caterpillar into the nest. It can be clearly seen that the little creatures hold a conversation by means of their feelers, after which four more come together in the entrance to the nest by their united strength. Further, I have observed the meeting of ants on the way to and from their nest. They stop, touch each other with their feelers, and appear to hold a conversation, for I know I have good reason to suppose refers to the best ground for obtaining food." Hague writes to a letter to Darwin, that he one day killed with his finger a number of ants who came every day from a hole in the wall to some plants standing on the chimney-piece. He had tried the effect of brushing them away, but it was of no use, and the consequence of the slaughter was that the ants who were on the way turned back and tried to persuade their companions who were not yet aware of the danger to turn back also. A short conversation ensued between the ants, which, however, did not result in an immediate return, for those who had just left the nest first convinced themselves of the truth of the report.—Leisure Hour.

Washington's Only Sister.

Mrs. Betty Lewis, Washington's only sister, is described, in a letter for February, as a woman of many virtues, and well beloved of her famous brother. In the future, however, she is more likely to be celebrated for her spelling than for anything else. We quote the following letter from the Scribner article:

JULY 5, 1756.

MY DEAR BROTHER: I received your letters of 25th and 27th of June, the day after I wrote to you, and was sorry to find your fever was what has lasted ever since. I feel never been clear of a fever since. I expected your coming there Baltimore that you would ascertain Mr. Parkes former visit. I have not seen nothing fails on the occasion. Harriet's Brother Wm. Dandridge is better from Baltimore and likewise one of Mr. Parkes emigrants taking them on these funerals. I know what he is to make up to that will be very large one. Lawrence was here at the first time Mr. Parkes [illegible] Dance or sing at the age, and I beg of him to make all the inquiry he could that you need from him and the last time I have notice I have and considered from that one of your request and was well pleased, when Mr. Parkes ask'd my consent I told him I had nothing to say to it. I must conclude with my love to be applied to [illegible] never concerned myself with [illegible] though I [illegible] to make choice for her self and if they do not like [illegible] better to settle near me, but I have no fear [illegible] of any young Person that I know.

I have no fear of your [illegible] disposition for your good intention of sending me a quilt if you had any to spare, but had no room to expect you to Dishman yourself.

I've no more room to write you for your invitation to Mount Vernon but it is already full of [illegible] Peter to get up, I believe. I wrote to you last [illegible] that I had received Horses and in [illegible] heard of and from that my wife was brought to upon and the last, I then carried and from that day to this I have not heard a word of him that was the forth current Hors that I left in Fredericksburg was my Horse that I had a great Passion for the Place, Harriet is better and is gone to the forth of July to Town but I think she looks badly.

My Love to you and my Sister Washington concludes me your Affectionate sister

BETTY LEWIS.

P. S.—I fear you will hardly make out this as I have a violent Headake and a horrid cough I cough [illegible] a violent pain in my Jaw low she is to be Provided with things for a Wesley Dress.

This was probably the aged sister's last letter to her brother. For she entered into rest early in March, 1797. Her portrait, taken in her youth, represents her as a tall, handsome woman, with brown hair and eyes her head held proudly erect and her full lips firmly, almost haughtily compressed, as if she had just issued some positive command to her army of tall sons.

VEGETINE
WILL CURE RHEUMATISM.

INDIANA, OHIO, Feb. 19th, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS, Boston, Mass.:

Dear Sir—I feel greatly indebted to your excellent VEGETINE for the great benefit it has done for me. I have suffered with it three years, and was for a time entirely helpless in my right, back and limbs for over eight months, at which time I commenced using Vegetine on the advice of a friend who had been greatly cured by it. I had taken but little more than one bottle until the pain had left me, and my health was fully restored. I attribute my entire recovery at this great time entirely to Vegetine. I was entirely cured by three bottles. I am satisfied if they try it they will find it to be all you claim for it. I am, very respectfully, yours,

H. HARMAN,
Manager Western Union Telegraph Office, Indiana, O.

VEGETINE
Will Cure Rheumatism.

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 14, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I take pleasure in saying that VEGETINE has done for my family. Eighteen months ago my daughter had a severe attack of rheumatism about her knees, and used the Vegetine advised her to try it, and she did so, using perhaps seven bottles, when she was entirely and perfectly cured. I am myself, at the present time, using the Vegetine for a severe attack of rheumatism. My doctor has been using Vegetine in his practice for CATARRH and NERVOUS DEBILITY, and finds it greatly beneficial in both of these diseases. I have used it in many others with great success, and I honestly believe that if it is taken according to directions it will cure almost all diseases that there is and I always wish to keep it in my house. Yours truly, A. KITTING,

VEGETINE.
A FAMILY MEDICINE.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, April 11, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir—I have been troubled and suffered a great deal with a severe pain in my side. I have tried many remedies, and benefited me but a very little, and I was about to give up in despair, when I was induced by a friend to try Vegetine. I made up my mind that if I received any benefit from it I would let the world know it, and I am happy to say that after taking two bottles I am entirely cured. She feels grateful for your inestimable medicine. Yours truly,
MRS. CHRISTIAN SCHMIDT,
No. 135 Longworth street.

With this testimonial before me, I cheerfully recommend VEGETINE to all who are afflicted with any disease of the blood.

Mr. Auner is a large real estate owner in Cincinnati, Ohio, an old resident, and well known in Cincinnati.

Rheumatism is a Disease of the Blood.

The Blood, In Fifth Edition, I found to contain an excess of Uric Acid, which is the cause of Rheumatism. It forms in the blood and deposits in the joints, muscles and tissues of the body. A thorough treatment with VEGETINE is absolutely necessary to a permanent cure. It is a powerful blood purifier, and will thoroughly eradicate every vestige of Rheumatic poison from the blood. Send for my treatise on Blood and Skin Diseases, mailed free. VEGETINE is entirely vegetable, and perfectly harmless. Directions for use in all languages.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Between this time and April the Assessors and Collectors of the "Fools' Tax." will be busy all over the rural districts, in the shape of agents of bogus nurseries, cloth peddlers, universal lightning rods, etc.—Iowa State Register.

—Boiled Pudding.—Two cups of buttermilk or sour milk, one and one-half cups of Indian meal, two cups of flour, one teaspoonful of saleratus, a little salt and one cup of chopped raisins; put in a pudding dish and cover tight; boil one hour without taking the cover off.

—A Swiss Soup.—Boil three pounds of potatoes; mash them well and add slowly some good broth, sufficient for the tureen. Let these boil together; then add some spinach, a little parsley, lemon thyme and sage, all chopped fine; boil all together five minutes; pepper and salt to taste; just before taking it off the fire to serve add two well-beaten eggs.

—Luncheon Puffs.—Put two ounces of flour into a saucepan with three ounces of butter, one of sugar, and a little pounded, some lemon peel, two yolks of eggs and one whole egg; little salt, and half a pint of milk; stir over a fire until the mixture sets like cream; then some tartlets with puff paste and fill with the above; bake in a brisk oven about half an hour; when cold, put some whipped egg on each, sprinkle sugar over, return to the oven to finish baking.

—Baked Turkey.—When cleaned, stuffed and trussed, put the turkey in a baking pan, with a little cold water in the bottom; sprinkle some butter over it, sprinkle salt all over, cover with a piece of buttered paper, and set in a quick oven, baste often, and turn the bird over and around if necessary. It takes from an hour and a half to two hours to bake a turkey. It is served with the gravy only, after having removed the fat, or with cranberry sauce or currant jelly.

—Corn Starch Pie.—One pint of milk, the yolks of two eggs, sugar to your taste, one tablespoonful of corn starch dissolved in a little cold milk; bake your crusts on two plates first, then bring your milk to a boil or nearly so, then stir in your egg, milk and starch worked smoothly together; when it thickens, throw in your sugar, take your crusts, then take the whites of four eggs and two tablespoonfuls of white powdered sugar, beat to a froth, or like frosting, and spread over the top, and set into the oven and brown.

—Salsify, or Vegetable Oysters.—Wash thoroughly, scrape off the skin and throw into cold water, with vinegar and water for a few minutes; take out, cut across in rather thin slices and fry quickly in butter; season with salt, until tender; they should be almost dry when done, then add milk, plenty of butter, pepper and salt, and pour hot over a dish of toast, or roasted bread, or boil two or three crackers fine and add to the soup. Another way is to wash, scrape and boil whole in salted water until tender, then cut length-wise, dip into a beaten egg, roll in crumbs and fry in lard.

—If you want success and comfort with Madeira vines, start them in the living room at any time from the present time to the first of June, giving each plant a five-inch pot. Provide a trellis upon which the plants may climb, but keep them well pinched back to induce lateral growth, and prevent their ramming as much as possible. About the 1st of June turn them out of doors, where they will soon grow, with the bulb of earth entire, and they will run ten to fifteen feet high over a porch or other suitable place, and throw out tuberals liberally; this from the middle of August until killed by frost, and will, besides their shade during the summer, bloom profusely.—Prairie Farmer.

Winter Treatment of Poultry.

For hens to lay in winter, it is necessary that they should be supplied with all the requirements of food, egg-shell and grit, and pure water, to keep them in a high state of health and activity. Good feeding is all that is required by nature for egg-producing, though each breed possesses a particular way of giving them sound, sweet food literally, than for any artificial condiment or preparation used for the purpose. The high price of such preparations, however good they may be, puts them beyond reach of the farmer to get a profitable return for the outlay. A grain invested in a few simple things, such as pepper, pulverized charcoal, sulphur and cayenne, answers all the purposes of keeping the birds in health. Even these should be used sparingly once or twice a week. When a fowl is found to be ailing, it must be separated from the others and treated with proper medicines for the disease. Such are now pretty well understood by practical breeders and poultry keepers.

Some years ago, hardly anything could be done for a sick fowl; but care and patience have found antidotes even for the most stubborn diseases, which, if taken before the bird sinks too low, will generally effect a cure. A farmer, however, cannot afford to spend much time on a hen, though valuable fowls are worth the trouble. Yet, when he finds any appearance of disease in his flock, he must make an effort to stop it at once, and not, as many will insist upon, leave them to their fate. In most cases, the spread of disease is easily prevented, if taken in time. After removing the diseased ones, a little sulphur and cayenne mixed in their soft food, a teaspoonful of sulphur and half as much of cayenne to four quarts of food given for two or three days, will generally arrest an ordinary trouble. The sulphur should be stopped, but the cayenne may be continued to be given as the birds recover. Indeed, it may be given to advantage once or twice a week all through the winter. Iron is a great tonic for ailing fowls, when first noticed to be out of condition. It is generally used in the drinking water. Iron is a great preventive of many complaints known as "Douglas' Mixture." It is sulphate of iron (common copperas), eight ounces, and sulphuric acid one-half fluid ounce. These, put in a bottle with a gallon of soft or rain-water, are ready for use as soon as the iron is dissolved. All keepers of poultry should brave this and other medicines on hand before any sickness is discovered, so that no delay occurs when promptness is required. Of special diseases I shall treat presently after. I have in former articles spoken of disinfecting the house and the necessity for the dust-bath, and of a supply of bone and oyster-shell.

The food should consist more of other grains than of corn. Although all kinds of poultry seem to prefer corn to other grain, yet corn has been proved by a great many poultrymen to be inferior for use as egg producers to wheat, barley, etc., and occasionally to buckwheat and oats. Corn may be given sparingly with these, but not corn alone unless bone-tea fat and lazy. So feel they lack animation and vigor, especially the Asiatic breeds, which are heavy than other breeds in this fattness that seems to border on disease. Their intestines become encased in one mass of fat, and no stint foods in any given quantity of food, especially when cramped, is quite impracticable. Soft food given once a day in winter is very beneficial, particularly during spells of severe weather. It promotes laying. It should consist of ground grain, as corn, buckwheat, barley, wheat or oatmeal, varied at times with some vegetable and animal food. I make up mixture by boiling a lot of potatoes or turnips, pouring the hot water (in which they were boiled) upon some meal in another vessel, with ground bone or scraps added twice a week and a little cayenne. Make this into a stiff paste. Mash the vegetables and add meal enough to make the whole into a stiff mass. Mix them together and feed when just warm. Most breeders recommend this to be done for their morning meal, but we will often leave the stock waiting hungry too long. Have light grain for them always, early every morning, after which feed the soft food by noon, if not sooner, and all the grain they will eat for evening meal.—Cor. Rural New Yorker.

A Mystery of "Limited Capacity."

A mystery of "limited capacity" recently appeared for a second wife a widow of some prosperity. Being an ardent servant of Mammon, a former neighbor asked him if she did not show the same symptoms. "Oh, yes, indeed," he said with animation; and then, as an expression of reverent awe stole into his face, he added, "and, what is very remarkable, the clothes of my wife's first husband just fit me."

THE WAR.

There is no important change in the situation in European Turkey. The English fleet remains at a point about sixty miles from Constantinople. Russian troops are with in four miles of Constantinople and Gallipoli threatening to occupy those places, should the British ironclads approach the Turkish capital. The announcement is made that 30,000 Russians are being concentrated in Roumania, which looks much as if the Czar had no striking faith in the pacific outcome of the pending negotiations.

Later—The latest dispatches state that Russia has demanded that the British fleet be withdrawn from the sea of Marmora, otherwise Russian troops will occupy Constantinople

The House of Representatives, on Thursday, by more than a two-thirds vote to carry case, enlarged all the Senate amendments to the Extra Bill, so it now goes to the President for action. Should he disapprove of it, which is more than likely, its passage over his veto is mainly certain in both houses.

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and healing virtues of vegetables combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting, as the result of his experiments, a concentrated remedy, the extract of the juices of which is found in the Magnetic Ointment.

His discovery consists in the fact that he found these powerful Vegetable Extracts will penetrate or magnetize the tissues of the human system.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application to the cure of the diseases named, as well as the greatest discovery of the age, and is the result of a trial and close investigation of its merits.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and thus to the capillary vessels of the blood by which equalizes the circulation of the blood by which means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it operates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, sinew and ligament, in every individual and tissue, cartilage of the portion of the human system, which is reached by the Magnetic Ointment.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to persons so near the grave that the most powerful mineral remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Lungs.

No patient ever died with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment was applied.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever presented. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it will afford entire relief to the worst kind of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sprains, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore Nipples, Chapped Hands, Piles, Chilblains, Chronic Sores, Abscesses, Felons, Burns or Scalds, Bites, Stings of Insects, Ringworm, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Boils, &c., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

PROBATE OFFICE.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January A. D. 1878. Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Nathaniel P. Youmans deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie E. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon, It is ordered, that Monday, the 2nd day of February next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested, are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said matter, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

THOSE PETITIONS.—As was expected nine-tenth signed petitions were presented to the Board of Supervisors on Tuesday asking them to carefully examine all bills, and to cut down the Co. officers salaries. The board considered that the latter clause of the petition could not favorably be complied with, inasmuch as the salaries had been fixed last October for the ensuing year. But the sentiment of a majority of the Board was against reducing the salaries even if this impediment were removed.

"THE GAZELLE."—M. J. Stockman returned home from Buffalo on Friday. He brought with him a model of his steamer now being built at Buffalo for the Pine Lake route. Her hull is nearly completed, and Mr. Stockman speaks of her in the highest terms of praise. Every effort is being made to make her staunch and trim, and her water-lines, as shown on her model, indicate that she will be fast. Her builders contracted to put in a 13x14 engine and a 41x4 wheel, but a 13x14 engine and 4ft.8 wheel are to be furnished. She will be completed by the first of April.

THE FOUNTAIN.—We are reliably informed that the propeller Fountain City will stop here the coming season as heretofore. The Idaho is to take the Lake Superior route.

Justice Court — The National Debt and Other Things.

"I am Sir Oracle when I speak
For no dog say: I am mouth."

On Saturday evening, the 23d, J. M. Clark, of this place, who at stated periods delivers lengthy dissertations on finance without saying anything in particular, favored a limited audience at Town Hall with one of these elocutionary efforts.

In the course of his innocent prattle he stated that "that he control of the affairs of this nation he would pay the national debt in sixty days." R. J. Worthington, an ambitious and rising young man of Charlevoix, was present. Mr. W. is an ardent opponent of the greenback doctrine, and a zealous advocate of the theory that the nation's quandam prosperity can only be regained by a return to the bi-metalic monetary standard of our fathers.

When the remark we have quoted dropped from the lips of the speaker, Worthington, in the debths of his soul, felt that, as a duty he owed his conscience, he must dissent from such a preposterous proposition. From the deep well-springs of his soul there rose up and burst forth a brace of words—only two short but poignant words of one syllable each.

They were indignant words — words which a Sumner would not have selected for the same purpose, but yet fraught with deep meaning, and the burden of an indignant soul. The orator paused briefly to make an appropriate comment upon Mr. Worthington's suggestion, but soon gathered up the broken threads of his "discourse" and proceeded.

On Tuesday Mr. Clark, as a peace officer, swore out a warrant against Worthington, and he was arraigned before Justice Miller on a charge of disturbing a meeting. Prosecuting Attorney Green conducted the case for the People, and J. Milo Eaton defended the respondent. The trial was fairly conducted, and the jury on first ballot unanimously acquitted the prisoner, it appearing from the evidence that no disturbance was caused. The costs of the suit are $12.98, which comes upon the county. Further coment is unnecessary.

EDITOR OF SENTINEL.

SIR—As quite a number of the readers of the SENTINEL were formerly residents of St. Lawrence Co. a word or two on said Co. may not prove uninteresting, especially as it comes from one who has a personal interest in Charlevoix.

At the commencement of my letter, I must say that I have been agreeably surprised, since coming into this, the stronghold of Republicanism in the old Empire State, at the knowledge of, and the interest taken in the affairs of Charlevoix, by those who have been readers of your valuable weekly. This speaks volumes for the SENTINEL. And now I am stronger than ever in the belief, that if each reader of the SENTINEL would take an extra copy, and send it to some friend of influence, great good would be done to Charlevoix. A good paper is the best recommendation that can be given to those who are looking for a place to locate.

Business is dull here on account of the lack of snow. At present writing prospects are fair for sleighing soon.

To the people of Charlevoix, one word may not be out of place. Some discouragement and a desire to quit their place and remove to some place where times will be better, have been manifested by some.

To such we would say, hold on to your places, and increase their value by improvements. A change will come ere long. Times will be better. Those who have kept up their small earnings, instead of spending them in a vain search for some better place, which exists only in the imagination, will be ready to take advantage of the first signs of returning prosperity, while those who have not pursued this course will then be as "hard up" as now. Times are as hard in St. Lawrence as in Charlevoix County.

I have attended several mortgage sales in this place, and there are more mortgages that will be foreclosed ere long.

Taxes may be high, and the prospects anything but inviting, yet economy and hard work will soon see good times to this locality.

With the best of wishes for the prosperity of Charlevoix

I remain,
A RESIDENT

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A BILL was passed in the Senate, on the 9th, appropriating $275,000 for the purchase of the President's State building, in Washington. A favorable report was made on the House Joint resolution declaring it inexpedient to continue the tax on distilled spirits. Resolutions of the Ohio Legislature, declaring all bonds of the Government to be payable in silver coin, favoring the passage of the Bland Silver bill, and declaring that President Hayes and Sec'y Sherman, in opposing the remonetization of silver, did not represent the views of the people of Ohio, were presented, read and laid on the table. Bills were introduced—providing for the liability of receipts of railroads in the State courts of the several States of the Union; to extend the commerce of the United States with Mexico; to provide for the completion of a boundary Pacific Railway, Mr. McDonald (Ind.) spoke in favor of, and Mr. Mellhenny in opposition to, the Silver bill. The formal proclamation of Carnotte's acceptance of the "Signing of the Emancipation Proclamation" took place in the House at two o'clock. the Senate being present in joint convention. Mr. Harford made the presentation speech. The Military Academy Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

In the Senate, on the 13th, an adverse report was made on the petition asking for an appropriation from the Chinese indemnity fund to aid in the relief of persons suffering from the famine in certain Provinces of China. A bill was passed providing for the sale of lands in Kansas. A bill was introduced and referred—to provide for the deposit of savings in the popular debt; also to provide for funding the National debt into home bonds convertible into currency. Messrs. Merrimon, Saunders, Hereford, Maxey and Voorhees spoke in favor of the Silver bill, and Messrs. Bayard and Hamlin against it. The conference report was arrived at by unanimous consent that the bill and amendments should be finally disposed of on the 18th. A bill was reported from the House, with the special order for the 24th, granting pensions on account of wounds, etc., contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, for the payment of arrears of pensions, and for the readjustment of the rule of names of invalid pensioners stricken therefrom on account of disloyalty. An exciting debate ensued on the motion of the Whole on the Military Academy Appropriation bill, the pending amendments to which were all finally disposed of and the bill was reported to the House.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 14th, to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Lincoln, and to organize the Territory of Oklahoma. The House took a resolution declaring that a reduction of the tax on distilled spirits is inexpedient. It passed and was passed—40 to 7. Consideration of the Silver bill was resumed, and Messrs. Jones (Nevada) and Wadleigh spoke thereon, the former advocating and the latter opposing the measure. Mr. Hamm submitted a substitute for the bill, and addressed the Senate on the same. The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury stating that internal revenue receipts for the current fiscal year, to date, as compared with the corresponding period of fiscal year, had suffered a decrease of $4,202,276, and stating as one of the causes of this decrease, the agitation of the reduction of the tax on spirits and tobacco. The Secretary urged a reduction of appropriations for the service of the Government during the next year, or an increase of taxation in such form as might be best, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommended the passage of a resolution in regard to tobacco similar to the one passed by Congress in regard to the tax on distilled spirits. After considerable debate, the consideration was interrupted by the passage of a resolution to proceed to executive business. The Military Academy Appropriation bill was amended and passed. A bill was introduced and referred to prescribe the time for the payment of the tax on distilled spirits, and for granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican and other wars was considered in Committee of the Whole.

AFTER the transaction of some unimportant business in the Senate, on the 15th, the Silver bill was again taken up and the debate was closed by Mr. Allison in favor of the passage of the bill after Mr. Ingalls had spoken in its favor. Several amendments were then rejected, and the following were agreed to: Striking out of the House bill the free coinage feature, and providing for the purchase of silver bullion by the Government to the amount of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 per month at $1 or 25 providing for an International Commission to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver and to meet in the city of Washington, and still in session up to the morning of the 15th, considering proposed amendments to the bill. In the House, a joint resolution was reported and referred, authorizing the President to invite the International Monetary Commission to consider and recommend uniform rates or relative valuation of coinage and legal-tender powers of gold and silver. After going into Committee of the Whole on the private calendar, and considering the bill to appropriate $250,000 to pay certain Southern mail contractors, the House adjourned to the 18th.

IN the Senate, on the 18th, a bill was introduced and referred—to provide for the election of a Territorial Governor and Secretary and other Territorial officers in the several Territories; to relinquish certain offices to the United States Army. A bill was passed for the relief of settlers on the public lands under the 3d section of the homestead law, that a settler who has once paid a tract of land a price or more as a change his settlement and take up one of the Homestead law, and the time spent on the former tract may be reckoned as part of the five years required under the Homestead law. The Silver bill, with the Senate amendments, was received in the House and placed upon the Speaker's table. The bill to personally George H. Gideon for the services rendered prior to the war was passed—132 to 97. Bills were introduced—to prohibit the organization of National Banking Associations under existing laws; to increase the capital of savings and refunding of the National debt; to issue to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company lands; a more thorough investigation of internal revenue frauds.

DOMESTIC.

THE schooner Speedwell reached New York, on the 11th, having on board the Master and crew of the schooner Sallie M. Steelman, which was abandoned at sea during a recent voyage from Charleston to Baltimore. According to the story of the survivors, they suffered almost indescribable horrors before falling in with the Speedwell. For eight days they lived upon nothing but fresh water and tobacco, their provisions having been washed overboard or exhausted soon after they encountered the storm which worked for them such direful results. On the day before their rescue they killed and ate two of the crew, to such extremity were they reduced. They encountered a gale off Cape Hatteras.

THERE is to be a National Fat Cattle Show in Chicago, opening in the Exposition Building on the 2d of December.

THE Ætna Iron Works, of Ironton, Ohio, has suspended payment. It was organized with a capital stock of $1,000,000.

AN understanding, based upon mutual concessions, was arrived at, on the 13th, between the manufacturers and the Cripples at Lynn, Mass., which virtually ended the strike, and all the establishments would speedily resume operations.

THE old family mansion of Daniel Webster, at Marshfield, Mass., was burned on the morning of the 14th.

THE homestead of J. Leffridge, near Ironton, Ohio, caught fire, a few days ago, and his three children, who were alone in the house, perished in the flames.

MRS. JANE PITMAN, wife of Ben Pitman, lecturer on Art in the Cincinnati School of Design, died in that city recently, and, in accordance with her own request, expressed in her last will and testament, the remains were taken to Washington, Pa., and there memorials were delivered in the Lecture Room, on the 16th, the operation being completed in less than two hours.

JOHN T. ALLEN was hanged at Carthage, Mo., on the 15th, for the murder, in April, 1874, of John L. Lane. (In the same day, at Madison, Ind., John W. Bowers was also hanged for the murder of J. W. Sewell.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 17th says the officers of the Postoffice Department are suffering not less than $250,000 a month by the flood of stamps sold by Postmasters at small country offices at a discount, for use in cities and towns. The Postmaster at St. Louis alone showed that his office was being defrauded of revenue to the amount of $18,000 per month in that way.

ON the 16th, the United States Treasury held $246,237,550 in United States bonds to secure National Bank circulation, and $13,460,000 in bonds to secure public deposits. National Bank circulation outstanding: Currency notes, $330,998,318; gold notes, $1,432,130.

A FIRE in New York City, on the evening of the 16th, destroyed a six-story iron-front building, known as Eckelbut Block, on the south side of Twenty-third street, near Second avenue, and two Presbyterian Churches adjoining. The total loss was estimated at from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

THE income tax of 1870 produced a revenue of $8,000,000, and was paid by 75,000 people. Commissioner Raum has recently expressed the opinion that the renewal of such tax would not now yield over half that amount.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

JOHN F. TRACY, for many years President of the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, died at Erie, Pa., on the 15th, after a long illness. He was in his fifty-second year.

THE President, according to a Washington dispatch of the 14th, has refused to remove Gen. Anderson, of the Louisiana Returning Board, from the office of Collector of the Port of New Orleans.

AMONG the nominations made by the President, on the 15th, were those of Bayard Taylor to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Germany; John Baker, of Illinois, Minister Resident to Venezuela; Wm. A. Howard, of Michigan, to be Governor of Idaho Territory; A. W. Speight and W. C. Quinby, of Texas, and Homer B. Sargent and John Van Bergen, of Oregon, to be Honorary Commissioners to the Paris Exposition.

ABOUT sixty members of the National House of Representatives, who favor the remonitization of silver, met immediately after the adjournment of the House on the 18th, and, after considerable discussion, agreed to a resolution that the bill returned from the Senate should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A NEW ORLEANS telegram of the 18th says fifty-three Republican members of the Louisiana Legislature had signed a pedestination addressed to Executive clemency in behalf of Gen. Anderson. Nothing had yet been reached in the case of Anderson's appeal for a new trial.

FOREIGN.

REV. ALEXANDER DUFF, D.D., a distinguished Scottish Missionary, is dead.

THE house of Daniel Reardon, at Witham, N. B., was burned, a few days ago, and Reardon, his wife and four children, perished in the flames.

A CONSTANTINOPLE telegram of the 14th announces the arrival of the British fleet off Constantinople. It was also reported that the Russian troops were marching Constantinopleward, and only a few hours distant.

AN Athens dispatch of the 14th says fighting had been renewed on the Thessalian frontier.

THE Turkish Parliament was dissolved, on the 14th, by message from the Sultan, who stated that the necessities of the situation were those which rendered this step, and that he hoped soon to reconvoke them.

IT was reported from Havana, on the 14th, that all hostilities in the Island of Cuba had been suspended, and that the insurgents, headed by their Chiefs, were trying to arrange terms for a permanent peace.

A BUCHAREST telegram of the 15th says the fighting there was exceedingly bitter toward Russia, and there was some talk of recalling the Roumanian contingent.

THE British Ambassador at Constantinople had a long conference with the Sultan, on the night of the 15th, to explain England's policy to His Majesty. It was reported, on the 16th, that the British fleet had been withdrawn to Sudasta Bay, forty miles south of Constantinople. A London dispatch of the 16th says it had been authoritatively stated that, in consequence of representations made by Austria, backed by Germany, the Czar had abandoned the idea of occupying Constantinople. All the Powers, including Russia, were stated to have assented to a Congress at Baden-Baden. The Czar and the Sultan were actively exchanging personal and friendly dispatches.

THE London Observer of the 17th believed that Russia had represented to England that the United States, as a great maritime Power, should participate in the coming Congress. England had not objected, but had suggested that Greece also be allowed to take part.

A PARIS dispatch of the 17th says two ironclads, from the French squadron at Smyrna, had gone to the entrance of the Dardanelles.

A PARIS dispatch of the 18th says that, at the earnest request of the Emperor Wilhelm, of Germany, the Russians had consented to forego the occupation of Constantinople. The British demonstration had not coalesced to this end.

A PESTH (Hungary) dispatch of the 18th says the Hungarian Ministry was in complete accord with Count Andrassy, the Austrian Premier; that Austro-Hungary would defend her interests diplomatically in the European Congress first, and that failing she would if necessary, use all the force at her command.

A ROME dispatch of the 18th states that sixty-one Cardinals, who had assembled there to attend the Conclave for the election of a successor to Pope —, entered their cells on the evening of that day. They would meet twice daily thereafter in the Sistine Chapel to vote—at ten o'clock in the morning and four in the afternoon—until a choice should be made.

The Silver Bill.

The following is the full text of the Silver bill as amended and passed by the Senate on the morning of the 16th. It is entitled "A bill to authorize the coinage of a standard silver dollar, and restore its legal-tender character:"

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be coined at the several mints of the United States silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains troy of standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837, on which shall be the devices and superscriptions provided by said act, which coin, together with all silver dollars heretofore coined, shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase from time to time silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 worth per month, and cause the same to be coined, monthly, as fast as so purchased into such dollars, and a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury. Bullion deposited under existing laws relative to the subsidiary coinage provided, that the amount of money at any one time invested in such silver bullion, including the value of the silver dollars, shall not exceed $5,000,000, and provided, further, that nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the payment, in silver, of certificates of deposit issued under the provisions of this act in lawful money, or of any of the bonds or notes of the United States.

SEC. 2. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That immediately after the passage of this act the Treasurer shall invite the governments of the countries composing the Latin Union to send a delegate or delegates to meet in conference with and under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of establishing international money based upon the relative value which may be fixed by the mutual agreement of the nations represented by such delegates, and for the purpose of securing a parity of the relative value of the two metals throughout the world sufficient to prevent the undervaluation of either metal in the markets of the world. Such conference shall report its action to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall transmit the same to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem necessary to carry such agreement into effect, which shall not become obligatory upon the United States in any manner or to any extent whatever, except as may be subsequently provided by act of Congress.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to appoint three persons, one of whom shall be a member of the Monetary Commission created by the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, who shall constitute such Commission, and shall report the action thereof to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress, and each person so appointed shall receive the sum of $7,500 and their necessary expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of State, and the amount necessary to pay such expenses is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 5. That any holder of the coin authorized by this act may deposit the same with the Treasurer of the United States in sums of $20, and receive therefor certificates of not less than $20 each, corresponding in denominations to the United States currency. The coin deposited for, or representing, the certificates, shall be retained in the Treasury for the payment of the same on demand. Said certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes and all public dues, and when so received may be reissued.

AS a funeral cortege was making its way along the crowded streets, the other day, to Montmartre, it was called to a companion: "Hey, Jack, what has the gun [a dead now?" "Tain't no rich folks," replied Jack, as he looked down the street. "Tain't no use! Well, just look at them twenty eight hacks!" "That's what I was looking at—that's how I know it's some common man. Rich folks don't keep what folks say, but poor folks buz big funeral processions to deceive the public."—Chicago Times.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

HON. SAMUEL H. ROW, Insurance Commissioner, has completed his annual statement of stock, fire, marine and fire and marine insurance companies. The following summary exhibits the financial condition on the 31st day of December, 1877. The home office statements of companies of foreign Governments are not required to be filed, and hence only the Michigan business of these companies, excepting from Canada, is given. The entire capital stock represented amounts to $40,865,-042.70; subscribed stock, $26,781,726.35; surplus as regards policy-holders, $16,625,-707.79; surplus over capital, reinsurance fund, and all other liabilities, $22,-930,360.40; total impairments of capital, $80,627.58. The aggregate of risks written in Michigan during the year 1877 was $145,-943,932.92. The gross premiums received for the same period amount to $1,383,-83.58, and the losses incurred foot up $1,342,-585.55. The difference of $341,244.03 between premiums received and losses incurred is the State cannot be considered as net profit. A deduction of the usual estimate, 35% per cent, of the gross premiums, in addition to the losses to cover the expenses of the business, would show a net loss on Michigan business for 1877. In estimating any further expense for reinsurance on risks still in force, assumed during the year. The aggregate of risks written during the year 1877 is greater by about $5,000,000 than in 1876, but the premium receipts are less by $15,000, in 1877 than in 1876, while the losses in 1877 are greater by $335,000 than in the year 1876.

THE total tax collected from liquor-dealers, in Michigan, as shown by reports in the office of the Auditor-General, was, up to the 1st of February, $1,100,447. At that time the reports of nine counties had not been received; but taking the figures of a previous year for a basis in the unrepresented counties, it was estimated that the total tax collected for 1877 would not fall far short of $1,300,000, with about $250,000 uncollected. The number of dealers in the State is about 4,000.

A WILD deer ran through the center of the Town of Vassar, the other day, jumping all the fences and going through all the gardens that came in its way.

JOSEPH LALONE was fatally injured by a rolling log at the Avery & Richardson camps, on the Saginaw River, a few days ago.

The balance of cash in the State Treasury Feb. 2, 1878, was $530,655.71; receipts during the week ending Feb. 9 were $240,782.90; warrants paid during same time were $19,558.32; balance in Treasury Feb. 9, 1878, $760,457.39; increase for the week, $221,401.66.

The examination of Rev. O. O. Fletcher, of Allegan, upon the charge of marrying a white girl to a colored man was concluded the other day, and resulted in his discharge. His plea was ignorance of the color of the girl.

E. G. STEVENSON & Co., of Grand Rapids, have been compelled to yield to the stringency of the times.

The residence of John Wills, of East Saginaw, was burned, on the evening of the 14th, Loss, $1,500.

AT the recent meeting of the Grand Encampment of the I. O. O. F., at Grand Rapids, the following were elected officers for the ensuing year: H. F., Norman Bailey, of Hastings; G. H., C. H. Palmer, of Jackson; Grand Scribe, F. J. Whitney, of Lansing; G. Treasurer, Harrison Soule, of Jackson; G. S. W., A. M. Harris, of Detroit; G. J. W., Jo-seph W. Ely, of Niagara; Grand Representative, Geo. H. Shearer, of Ann Arbor.

BENJAMIN BOOKER & Straight & Co.'s milling, of Ionia, burned on the evening of the 11th. They have about completed the work of rebuilding.

A fire broke out in Midland burned, on the morning of the 11th, involving a loss of $5,000. It is suspected that it was set on fire by some gang of tramps, who was controlled to pay in advance for his lodging.

BAY CITY physicians are puzzled over the singular death of a Miss Peck, in that city. She was about sixteen years old, and apparently in the best of health. Without any known cause, she fell into a heavy stupor, which lasted for seven hours and from which nothing but death could relieve her.

THE house of R. L. Willard, Michigan Commercial Traveling Editor of Jackson, was burned on the 15th. Loss, $1,500.

JULIA A. MOORE, the Sweet Singer of Michigan, gave birth to a son, on the 13th.

LOUISE EARTH, a degraded woman, was found dead in an unoccupied house, in Detroit, on the 15th.

THE various boards of the City of Detroit want $275,197.20 to run the city during the present year.

SINCE OCT. 1, 1875, there have been received at the State Prison 834 convicts.

A PIG bears with but a single thought," as the Clarion calls them, are trying to establish agencies for the white wire clothes-line in Lapeer County, but the people up there read too many newspapers to make good agents, and the beats will have to try some other field.

ON the 10th, Judge Huntington entered a final decree in the University chancery suits against Rose, Douglass and the sureties of Regent, in requiring that interest shall be paid on all sums in the hands of either defendant at the end of each fiscal year, thus considerably lessening the judgment against each. Rose is held for $4,708.81, and Douglass for $1,836. Sixty days are allowed to pay the amounts, and in default of payment on the part of either party execution will issue. This decree ends the case in the courts, except as to the question of costs between the two defendants, which is reserved for decision till the March term of court.

DAVID MACLARINAN, Register of Deeds of Muskegon County, has sued O. B. Curtiss, of the Muskegon Chronicle, for libel, laying damages at $5,000.

White Hands.

POETS, novelists and high-toned people generally, have always had a great deal to say about white hands.

Their heroines are always represented as having hands milk-white, and lily-white, and all other kinds of white. And the hands in question are small and soft, and bear no marks of toil, and are fit only for sorting silks, and for lovers' lips to kiss—and very aristocratic and high-toned lovers at that.

"No woman, no matter how graceful and well-informed she may be, can be thoroughly a lady if her hands be big, and brown, and coarse."

We do not wish to dispute the author's opinion, for this is a free country; and if everyone has not a right to his own opinion, then he needn't have any more Fourths of July, nor birthdays of Washington, and people might as well leave off christening their babies Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson. But we beg to inquire, is to become of the thousands of women all over our land who do have big hands, and make their husbands' cares a misery with their own hands?—who fry the doughnuts, and peel the onions, and wash the potatoes, and scrub the pots and kettles, and attend to things generally? Labor of that kind will harden and blacken the loveliest hand in the world in a week; and it is no use to talk about rubber gloves, and lemon juice, and glycerine, for the one who has the work to do for six in family, and a baby to tend into the bargain.

And so it appears that our best humored jokers, the women who make the homes of their families places of quietness, peace and contentment, cannot be ladies, cannot be beautiful, because their hands are not white!

What a fate for them! We wonder if the majority of them have a realizing sense of it? And the writer of that article—for it bore a man's name—would be willing to compromise—would not be so hard upon the bread and bib for dinner, that his wife might not blacken her hands peeling potatoes and slicing quinces? We wonder if he would send his shirts to the laundry, and clean out the stoves himself, in order that she might preserve her hands white, so as to be a lady?

We admire white hands ourself; they are lovely, and are much to be desired—and so are pearls and diamonds; but all cannot have them. Some of the most perfect ladies we have ever known were women who did their own housework; who sewed for the family till their fingers were pricked to pieces; who had toiled for the good of those they loved, until their hands were hard and brown as a farmer's; and were considered that they were losing caste by so doing.

The hands of our mothers and grandmothers in this Republican country are not white; but we would not wish to hear them stigmatized as lacking in refinement and loveliness because of that. The kindly, loving hands which soothed our childish woes, and smoothed our pillows in sickness, which were racked with pain! the gentle hands which knew so well how to soothe care and trouble away!—the hands in whose magic touch there were strength, and comfort, and peace, for many a weary transgressor!—what matter if it they were white or beautiful—what mattered it if they were horny with the performance of kindly deeds, or reddened with the heavy of idleness?

It is every woman's duty to be beautiful, and if she can have white hands, let her have them; its all means; but a lady is a lady, be she found in hovel or palace—be her hands white or black; and all creation knows when it sees her, and admires her accordingly.—Kate Thorn, in N. Y. Weekly.

THE LOST METROPOLIS.

"Morning papers! Two hundred lives lost."
A bell tolls, a newsboy's cry,
A passing glance, perhaps a sigh—
At what is written there.
A husband's sorrow, ease of mind;
A sunny wife and two hundred blind—
The old, the young, the fair.

The hopes of better days ahead,
Of comfort's shore, of warmth and bread
For dear ones left on shore,
A sinking ship, our thought alone
Of orphan's fondness, of widow's moan,
One cry, and all is o'er.

A happy home with tender ties,
Awaiting death Brethren wives
A welcome just ahead.
An infant boy on mother's breast
As white as glass on the breaker's crest—
That shrieks for food, and dead.

The ships sail out, and ships sail in,
And wealth goes out once more wealth to win
And love to find its own.
But ships go down, and cries go up,
And wealth and love are lost in a picket cup

A landing sky o'er rippling bay,
A mother's heart, a mother's joy,
A voyage to many lands.
A little grave, a mother's grief—
Two hundred families lacking life
On the Metropolis sands.

MY NEIGHBOR.

Love your neighbor as yourself—
Who, with garden hat and gloves,
Is digging in the yard?
And I glance across the way
At my neighbor's wife,
Who, with garden hat and gloves,
Is digging in the yard.

Love your neighbor as yourself—
Winsome, blue-eyed sallie,
Hidden glories of sunny hair,
Dimpled, pink and pearly,
As I lean upon the gate
And watch her at her labor,
How can I help but love her,
Do I love my neighbor?

Love your neighbor as yourself—
How devout I'm growing
All my heart with fervent love
Toward my neighbor down the way.
Ah! to keep this fatal love unspoken
Were the hardest task
For wife all my heart and soul
Do not my neighbor love?

IN THE REVIVAL.

"Over there! over there!" sang the white-robed choir, and the entire audience within the other world stretched scarcely more distant than the lazy western hills. "Over there! over there!" quavered young Mrs. Thirtieth, who was longing only for rest and reunion. "Over there! over there!" chimed their fingers were pricked to pieces; who had toiled for the good of those they loved, until their hands were hard and brown as a farmer's; and were considered that they were losing caste by so doing.

The hands of our mothers and grandmothers in this Republican country are not white; but we would not wish to hear them stigmatized as lacking in refinement and loveliness because of that. LAST words of Methuselah. "This is untimely. I am cut short at this."—Buffalo Express.

Christie turned around. From the yellow maple canopy above her the leaves drifted softly down; the beeches at her side stirred gently; the river-pond beneath the hemlocks mirrored the moon in silence. An awesome feeling stole over Christie.

"Oh, dear!" sighed she; rising and plaiting her striped shawl smew; "I wish I could be a Christina, like the other girls; but it takes so much thing that, with the washing and ironing and baking, the patches to set on the boy's knees, and the herbs to steep for mother, there is no use in thinking of it."

Had our Lord and Master just then come softly stepping over the moonlit Canterbury Hills, and stood for a moment at Christie's side, He might have quietly smiled at the girl's ideas. Perhaps he did. Christie again glanced around, felt rather than saw raining over her the yellow and the pale purple light, felt rather than saw the sunning waters trembling below the dark hemlocks, and the golden leaves noiselessly dropping, dropping on all sides. Not from anything in them, but from something beyond and through them. A sensible presence descended into her heart, bringing gladness, bringing confidence.

She went on. From that light and glory without, she pushed the door open upon the family sitting-room with its smoke of burnt fat, summons with an odored long-steeped herbs and a whisky smell.

By the light of two kerosene lamps, three candles and a lantern, Joe Miller was cheerfully eating a heavy supper of his own preparing. Ashes were on the hearth, a kettle and miscellaneous garments on the bare floor. With a fine, fantastic Christie caught at the back of the wooden rocker.

"A light to your eyes and a lump to your pate! There's Scripture for that," said Joe, turning a freckled face all array of limbaries. "This 'ere ligerous element ain't the thing, Christie. You ought to be at home, doing your duty. I don't 'prove of ligerous 'citement. Show me your Bible, Christie, and I'll show you my fever—show yer—show——"

"Faith without works is dead!" cried Joe, suddenly bringing his hand down upon the table with a force which sent wavelets over the surface of his tea—"dead—dead—dead!"

Joe leaned back, dropping his head upon his breast, and murmured the last "dead" as if he experienced exquisite satisfaction touching the demise of faith. Joe didn't know anything of people who are fond of quoting this text, as if faith was a personal enemy they were glad to see defunct. Strategy were as their acquaintance with either party is usually extremely slight.

"Christie" called a hysterical voice, from a close, dark bedroom. "Mr. Simeon Powers didn't say anything about the mortgage, did he?"

To the woman's nervous apprehension, the Powers might rise and cry out in meeting: "Mortgage! I'm going to close the mortgage."

"Christie!" sobbed mother voice, from under her dark bedroom, only years between the quality of its bosoms and that of the mother's—"Christie! I'm dying for a drink!"

"Coming!" from the head of the stairs. "Horace Greeley won't give me my half the bedclothes."

It was about right when Christie climbed the bare, warped staircase to her own room. This room contained two beds, and three children were its slumbering occupants.

Christie's preparations for retiring were peculiar. On a small stand at the head of her bed she placed a box of mustard and a little flour-paste in a teacup, a bottle of Jamaica Ginger, a camphor-bag, a flannel containing a little oil of carbolic, a piece of camphor gum, and a bottle of syrup of ipecac. No ordinary prophecy, based upon past experience, could show forth whether Felicia Hemans would be seized with the croup or Lincoln with convulsions before morning, and for either or both possibilities she must be prepared.

She laid her head on her own skimpy pillow, anxious and weary, the peaceful feeling that had come by the brook-side quite lost. Moonlight, checked by the shadows of the window-sash, fell upon the bare, dimly-illuminating the room; but it suggested no comfort. Two dissimilar pictures were present to her imagination: In one, the boys at service and her father at the "tobe"; in the other, the family crowded into a low basement, worse degradation on her father's part, no, to be sure, all abandonment of the light disguises by which she had hoped she concealed from the world the actual wretchedness of the family life. Tears trickled down upon her hot, nervous fingers.

Then suddenly came the thought. God was undoubtedly on Mr. Simeon Powers' side, since he was a churchmember; but, God being good, He might help her, though she was in the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity.

Her heart seemed literally to swell with this great thought. She clasped her hands, moist with nervous perspiration upon the inside, wet with tears on the outside, and she said aloud: "O God! don't take our home from us! Don't!"

A light southeast breeze rattled the loose and broken clap-boards at the corner and rats went racing through a partition; but Christie cried again: "Don't, O Father, take it away from us!"

At two the checkered light on the floor had shrank in breadth. Christie had begun to rest. Rocked by the striking of the clock, she murmured: "Don't take it away!" Then added, folding her hands, palms downward, "Lay, won't!" and smiled wearily. Three o'clock, and only a narrow patch of light beneath the window. "I'm so glad I thought of that," murmured Christie. Four o'clock, and the moon is down. The wind has shifted to the northwest and is a cutter. Christie's chamber quickly feels any change in the outside temperature. Felicia Hemans starts up, crying with the toothache. Christie's lids are now heavy. Every overstrained nerve and weary muscle has sufficiently relaxed to long for repose; but Christie rolls the child in a blanket, takes her in her arms, and with the aching face warm against her bosom, rocks and sings patiently.

Tennyson has enjoyed telling us how the sweet sister, rising on St. Agnes' Eve, looked over convent roofs, white with snow and glistening in the moon, and breathed to Heaven her prayer. We have enjoyed hearing about it, and doubtless the sweet sister enjoyed it at the time. There is a vein of religious sentimentality which finds its own exceeding reward in rising at dead of night (providing it isn't too cold), looking over snowy fields, and sighing after perfect peace, purity, patience and other virtues beginning with a p.

A plain-faced, sweaty girl, in a berk woolen rocker, singing to a cross child on a windy autumn morning could hardly be wrought into a picture of peony and bound in Russia, to lie upon drawing-room tables; but upon which sister the great Master of Love and Beauty would look with kindliest eye everyone is entitled to his own convictions.

At two o'clock the next afternoon Christie, hurrying by the open door of the church, heard Mr. Powers' baritone, beyond all the rest of the congregation, calling forth:

"Almost persuaded, almost persuaded!"

"Dear me!" thought she. "I hope 'tain't close the mortgage!" Then she went on to the druggist's after valerian root for her mother.

Mr. Powers went up to Joe Miller's from the meeting.

"You can't find another man in town who would have had the patience with you I've had, Joe. If I had seen you making the least effort to pay up I would still let the note lie."

"Come now!" said Joe, who was still in a state of unnatural elevation. "Come on! I fear not the face of man —profession or sect—nor professors, ministers or laymen. You may turn us out here; but you can't turn us out of the Kingdom. It is easier for a needle's eye to swallow a camel than for a rich man to enter there."

Mrs. Miller, who had roused herself to contend with oppression, and who sat by the stove, with a shawl wrapped around her, began nervously stirring and steeping valerian and weeping. "The rich don't know anything about the sufferings of the poor. They've got the power in their hands, and they don't care. But it's a poor kind of religion, I should say, that turns folks' souls, without a nerve or tear, into dragging slaves" had been one of the secrets of Mr. Powers' business success.

A half-pint had been left during Mr. Powers returned to Joe's. The head of the family had slept off his undue elevation, and the underpin had exercised its own soothing influence

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, March 1, 1878.

Opinions may possibly differ as to the sky's action on the 22d. Whether its protracted and violent weeping in this vicinity was due to its regret that the illustrious G. W. was born, or on the other hand, that he should have died and left a name behind him to be tacked onto some 500 American towns and 500,000 American taverns and saloons, is a question I won't venture to decide off hand. At all events, the 146th anniversary of his first appearance in these oppressed colonies was of all gloomy days the gloomiest. All the open-air programmes had to be abandoned, and such celebrations as the pouring rain permitted to our drooping spirits had to be carried on indoors. The most noticeable event of the holiday was as usual the grand Martha Washington reception and tea-party in the evening, of which this my third annual notice. As in previous years the Academy of Music and Nilson Hall were thrown together, and connected with Irving Hall on the opposite side of the street by a covered passage way, which the decorations had converted into a veritable fairy grotto.

The grand affair was opened by a reception on the stage of the Academy, in which Martha Washington was personated by Mrs. Thomas Francis Meagher, and various dames of the "Republican Court" by other prominent ladies, all in appropriate costume. Among these ladies was Mrs Lewis Washington, a veritable grand-niece of G. W. himself. Irving Hall was arranged to represent a Chinese tea-garden, all the appointments being in keeping, including the the absolute novelty of a genuine Chinese orchestra—pig-tails, tom-toms and all.

The tea-garden was an exceedingly interesting feature of the occasion. Behind each booth, all simply but appropriately hung with straw matting, stood graceful and becomingly dressed young ladies accompanied by their chaperones, and in front were one or two grave Celestials, who poured out tea and surveyed the crowd with great composure. Upon the counters were offered for sale little boxes containing real Chinese tea, and sold each for $1.50. These met with a ready sale. At the farther end of the hall was a small booth in which were seated the members of the Chinese orchestra, which was directed by Hal Wace. The Chinamen played continuously during the evening; sometimes a slow, monotonous air, with an accompaniment of drums and stringed instruments, and then, changing suddenly, would break into a wild dance-tune played upon a shrill instrument resembling a clarinet.

The whole was, as usual, under the auspices and for the benefit of St. John's Guild, and made about $10,000 which, in the hands of this organization, will do much for the comfort of the sick and poor during the coming summer.

The election of Pius IX's successor was watched and anticipated with the closest interest here, not only by the thousands who owe spiritual allegiance to the Roman Pontiff, but also by the other thousands who are fully aware of the greater or less importance to all civilized governments of the powerful religious organization of which he is the head. Happily Leo XIII is, according to all accounts, the most acceptable prelate to all countries who could have been chosen, and general satisfaction is expressed over this result.

Journalistic enterprise commensurate with the magnitude of the occurrence was displayed by all the papers in recording, with the greatest promptness and particularity, the proceedings of the Conclave, which were indeed so rapid and so brief that Cardinal McCloskey, who started from here immediately after the death of Pius IX to take part therein, did not arrive in Rome until all was over. The election of the new incumbent was formally proclaimed from a balcony of the Vatican at 1:15 in the afternoon, and at about 2 o'clock the Evening Mail was out with an account of the election and a biography of the successful candidate, which, even allowing for the difference of time between the two cities must be admitted to be a pretty wide awake performance. This only accords, however, with the new reputation which the Mail has been building since the recent change of ownership to which I referred at the time of its accomplishment. Its present owner, Mr. Clark Bell, has brought to its management the same judgment and executive ability that have given him his prominence at the bar and in various public enterprises, and, aided by the brilliancy and editorial experience of "Ansley," is making a great paper.

A set of mild, pleasant young men they have down at Princeton College; a nice set for a small tea party or a theological seminary. It isn't many months ago that they hilariously burned up a small lumber yard, and played a few other merry little jokes of a kindred nature, which the citizens did not fully appreciate, and which narrowly escaped resulting seriously to the students and the institution. Some two weeks ago a couple of these playful youngsters belonging to the Sophomore class got hold of a Freshman, and, faithful to college traditions, performed upon him the sensible and useful ceremony of "hazing" with great vigor and numerous variations. The Freshmen, also conforming to tradition, got their backs up at this tyrannical insult and vowed revenge in pursuance whereof some dozen of them entered the rooms of the offending "Soph" the other night with masked and blackened faces, and after shaving the heads of their victims and beating them black and blue, gagged them to prevent an outcry and retired. The latter soon effected their release from bonds and gags and rousing their classmates gave chase. Coming up with their natural enemies, the aggrieved Sophomores pulled out revolvers and began shooting. The Freshmen blazed away in return and succeeded in laying out a "Soph" with a serious and almost fatal bullet wound. Such are the amenities with which polite literature and the study of the classics are varied at the brightest educational institutions in America.

A lively discussion is now under way here in the press, the nature of which would highly delight Mr. Darwin were he only here to witness, and perhaps take a hand in it. The proprietors of the Aquarium, who are constantly extending the attractions of that institution by the accumulation of animal wonders, something a la Barnum of old, recently imported from Africa a pair of chimpanzees, or man monkeys, for exhibition. The creatures do look almost human, and the Aquarium folks sought to take them from the vessel without paying the customary duty on live animals, on the ground that it was by no means settled whether the upright and tailless chimpanzees were the lowest grade of men or the highest grade of monkeys. Uncle Sam was a trifle staggered by this novel proposition, but finally declined to put so fine a scientific point on the subject, and compelled payment on the duty, under protest, by the owners, who have since commenced writing letters to the papers, half in banter and half in earnest, supporting the Darwinian theory, and drawing out numerous replies which treat the Aquarium claims with various degrees of seriousness. Meanwhile, people flock to see the "critters" about which there is so much dispute, and so the astute managers feel perhaps somewhat compensated for the hardship which they claim to have suffered.

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Hemorrhages, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c.

"German Syrup"

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist, and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

The Cremation of the Body of Mrs. Pitman.

Dr. LeMoyne, the cremationist, who is the pride of the Town of Washington, has been a happy man to-day, for he has cremated the body of Mrs. Jane Pitman, wife of Benn Pitman, of Cincinnati, the noted phonographic author. Mrs. Pitman's body reached Washington, this morning, accompanied only by Mr. Pitman and one of his newspaper friends from Cincinnati. It was inclosed in an oiled chestnut casket, shaped something like a dry-goods case, the same width all the way from head to foot. When it arrived in Washington, the casket was covered with a piece of black oil-cloth, on the center of which was tacked a permit from the Health Officer of Cincinnati for the removal of the body from that city, and stating the cause of death to be cancer of the stomach. A very shabby and very muddy hearse, a relic of the War of 1812, was in waiting at the Washington depot to receive the body. The oil-cloth was pulled off, and the casket was shoved into the hearse. It was noticed that the undertaker took particular pains to fasten the back doors of the hearse, and the cause of this was apparent when the hearse began to roll up the long inclined plane that leads to the house of burnt bones. If the doors had not been securely fastened in it would have slid down the hill.

The corpse of the woman went up the steep hill unaccompanied, save by the driver of the hearse, and when it reached the little brick house several of the curiously-hunted who were sitting on the fence helped carry it in and lay it on the table. Mr. Pitman meanwhile was seated in Dr. LeMoyne's parlor talking with the old gentleman about the beauties of cremation.

At about one o'clock Mr. Pitman and LeMoyne's two sons and daughters started for the top of the hill. They and the newspaper friend of Mr. Pitman from Cincinnati were the only mourners. The furnace was then at a white heat, the Dr. Palm ironman, James Wolff, having been dismissed and a fireman from the Washington Gas-Works taken in his stead. There were no religious ceremonies of any kind. Several of Mrs. Pitman's lady-friends in Cincinnati had read poems and delivered addresses over her while her body lay in the dead car, and Mr. Pitman himself had delivered a short address, but neither time was there a prayer or a tear, or even a sigh.

"Are you ready?" said the fireman at two or three minutes before two o'clock. "All ready," replied young LeMoyne. The big iron door of the retort was taken off, filling both rooms with an almost unbearable glare and heat. The young LeMoynes picked up the body, which had been laid in the same iron cradle in which Dr. Palm was cremated, resting the head on the edge of the furnace, shoved the body in like an oyster-knife going into a clam. The body was encased in a white sheet soaked in resin-water, but this did not entirely cover the head, and, as soon as the head of the corpse was within a foot or two of the furnace door, the shabby cloths in which the head was encased caught fire and in an instant the entire building was filled with a dense black smoke, with a sickening smell. The door was quickly closed, but the overpowering odor of burning hair and flesh lasted for fifteen minutes or more, although the windows were opened to get rid of it. Dense clouds of this black smoke also poured from the chimney of the retort, filling the air about the building with the disagreeable smell. After the body had been roasting for about fifteen minutes, a slight bluish flame came from it, and this continued throughout the cremation. After three-quarters of an hour, a skeleton of fire could be seen through the peep-holes, the head burned off and rolled to one side, and in a few minutes more the bones had all separated and lay loose upon the floor of the retort. The hip-bones were first to give way, and, when they fell in, an hour and fifty-one minutes after the body was put in, the cremation was pronounced complete, and the building was opened and locked up. It was decided that the ashes must remain in the retort till next Monday, so that it may not be said any possibility of cracking when the air is admitted, as it is usually cracked already. Mr. Pitman starts to return to Cincinnati to-morrow morning, and his wife's ashes are to be sent on to him by express. Experts say that Mrs. Pitman burned as much quicker than Dr. Palm because she was a fresh corpse and he was stale and dry.—Washington, Pa., (Feb. 15) Dispatch to Chicago Tribune.

A Quailled Witness.

It was at a Justice's Court in Newbury, Jonathan Upham, Esq., was the trial district. The case on trial was of trespass—trespass of a serious and aggravated kind—and damages consequently heavy for that rural district were at stake.

You should have known Judge Upham. He was a short, fat, red-faced, bald-headed man, with a red nose and bleary lips; and his flabby, dumpy chin, that fell in the region of a most capacious white neck-kerchief. He had been a great and moving politician in his day, and even now regarded himself as the battery whence radiated about all the wires that could be operated in his Congressional District; had in these later years, since he had worn gold-bowed spectacles, and the limited state pew, declined, to be but beat a decent coat and constant leader in his church, and had become religiously and judicially austere.

In the course of the trial Jim Fillet, who was called upon as a witness by the defense. Jim was a shock-headed, broad-faced, simple minded fellow, somewhat shiftless, but not evil. Counsel for plaintiff objected to him, on the ground that he was not qualified.

"James Fillet," said the Judge, very gravely, "do you understand the nature of an oath?"

"Why, yaas, 'Squire, I guess so."

"And do you know what perjury is?"

"Ye mean lyin', 'Squire?"

"Yes; I mean lying under oath."

"Why in course I know what that is."

"And James, do you know where perjurers and liars are sent?"

"Waal," said Jim, with the very solemnity of gravity, "I know the man that told me most lies down in Sautmk last fall, was sent to Congress!"

Smokers Should Read This.

The popular belief that bad cigars are made of cabbage leaves is not justified by the last official report on tobacco adulteration. This document contains a tabulated account of the seizures of spurious tobaccos made in the United Kingdom since 1834, and in the whole paper there is no mention whatever of the much-suspected vegetable. Its place in the black list is supplied by a variety of ingredients large enough to rejoice the heart of any member of the Anti-Tobacco League. The dishonest dealer in things smokeable is shown by the report to make use of three different sorts of materials beside that which he professes to employ. The first sort is required for the actual substance of the cigar; the second for improving its outward appearance, and the third for imparting to it what is supposed to be a better taste. In the former category the favorite substances seem to be the leaves of the lime tree, the husks of wheat and oats, cotton, yarn and tow-spun bean. But there are numerous cases where the ingredients have been much more curiously selected, and have included rosemary fiber, small seeds, potatoes, wood and bread. At one establishment fifty pounds of "tobacco dust" were found and analyzed, when it was found to contain string, wood, nails, grindings of tobacco-pipe, dirt and all sorts of refuse. Another large class of materials is apparently used for securing the uniformity and consistency of the cigar when made. Among these starch is the most prominent; but it includes gum and sugar, molasses, blue, gum arabic, glue, glycerine and essential oils. The color of the fabrication is the next thing to be attended to, and for this purpose resort is had to yellow ocher, red sanders, dalwood, logwood, lamphlack and Venetian red. As for the flavor of the cigar, it is carried to suit the various perverse tastes, but the usual object seems to be to impart to it a pleasing sweetness of tone. Accordingly saccharine matter, and especially treacle, is very largely pressed into the service. For those who like a rather more decided taste, liquorice, sal-ammoniac, glycerine and nuisseed are used. It is in Dublin where the latter ingredient is most fashionable, while Edinburgh is famous for treacle and sugar and East London is addicted to liquorice.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Thrilling Railroad Experience.

Every one in any way conversant with the construction of the Dunkirk, Warren & Pittsburgh Railroad knows how rapid is the descent from Lanna into Fredonia. The fact that the greatest care has always been observed in running trains over this particular part of the road is well known to the engineers and brakemen, and they are very liable to be "on deck" and busy when they strike this dangerous locality. Last Saturday evening, about eleven o'clock, an accident happened at the place we have above described which came very near ending in death and destruction. The night was intensely cold, and when the regular freight train pulled out of Canadaga all the brakemen but one were in the caboose warming up, preparatory to standing guard over the long train of twenty-nine cars when the heavy grade was reached. Just after leaving the station the train broke in two, the last seven cars being left behind, the balance with only one brakeman keeping on unaware of the accident.

The top of the hill was reached and the descent began. The engineer, finding himself impelled along at a terrible rate, reversed his engine, though he says he expected to see the cylinder heads blown out and his locomotive a wreck and whittled for brakes. The cars were covered with ice and snow, and the solitary brakeman took his life in his hand when, in the darkness, and the train thundering along at the rate of about a mile a minute down a grade that increased the speed every second, he sprang from one car to another and set every brake on the whole twenty-three cars. The run from the top of the hill to Fredonia was made in an incredibly short space of time, and by the bravery of the brakeman, the quick discovery of the impending danger by the engineer, and the good work of the locomotive and every brake, the train was kept from a plunge into the Dunkirk Depot and total annihilation. The distress and anxiety of the conductor and brakeman in the caboose as to the antecedents of their charge and friends was very great, until a dispatch from Fredonia finally relieved all fears, and that which ill-luck had severed for a while man's ingenuity soon brought together again.—Jamestown (N. Y.) Democrat.

Spring Goods.

The earliest importations of spring goods have been received, also, the rough-threaded effects popularly known during the winter are repeated in materials for spring and summer dresses. The taste for grave colors, such as gray and brown, seems to have died out, as these colors are found only in the hedges that are naked of the natural color of the fleece of which they are woven. Ecru flints are not so generally seen as they formerly were, yet they have not disappeared; they form occasionally the background for displaying brilliant colors, and the cream, ivory, tilbut, old gold and mandarin yellow combine with other showy hues in the mingling designs of the new fabrics. Black is seen in abundance as a solid color, as a background for light colors, and most frequently in new combinations with white and gray that are very attractive, and cannot fail to revive the taste for these colors. The moss-green shades and dark myrtle-green are abundantly used again, and indeed find their way into almost every mixture of colors. Inella blue, a dull, dark shade—and dark indigo blue enter into a number of the combinations. There is also a great deal of ivory white mixed with the darkest green and with a number of other colors; this ivory tint without yellowish hues, it is said, will be more stylish than the deeper cream and tilbut shades. The colors of India shawls and of Persian rugs, with something of Scotch plaid and checked patterns, will be found in the sheerest fabrics for summer dresses.

Wooden stuffs of light weight for early spring wear are very soft and flexible, though they have rough threads raised above the surface in long horizontal flushes, or as if tied in knots, or else boucle in small round rings, curls, or frizzed suits. Others have crape effects, and those are found among the mixed goods, upon which are large downy-looking spots like the pollen-bits formerly seen. Bouclé mixtures of brown black and white with thick tufts of color all over it. Pale blue grounds have rough threads of olive green; cream-colored grounds have knots of India red and of sky blue. Rainettes of two shades of moss green have blue and rose threads, while pale gray grounds are covered with gold, scarlet and olive green. There are also many darker grounds with the rough threads of Medallion blue running in cross-bars; in these two shades of blue and of red are mostly used; seal brown is barred with red; moss green and brown are together, gray is with buff, and buff with blue. The best shades generally are two hints of blue together, and black and white.

The silk and wool mixtures for overdresses are what merchants consider "seasonable goods," because the same fabric becomes common to any material with two threads. One very rich mixture of silk and wool is called velours velvet, as the silk cast upon the surface has as long pile as velvet, and the colors are as varied and rich as those in the feathers of the hoopoopiere. Another, called Lyons' plush, has plush-like stripes of silk on woolen fabrics, and Scotch Edinburgh cheviots are striped with cream color, or myrtle green with rose or gold. There are also many damask-figured silk and wool goods to be made up as over-dresses above plain silk of the darkest shade in the mixture.

Among the novelties are fringed stripes of silk floss so firmly woven in that it is impossible to pull them out, alternating with narrow stripes of wool of the same color or in marked contrast. Another novelty is the pointille stuff with square dots or other smaller than pinhead checks; indeed, consisting of a single thread of color sunken between raised white threads. These are largely imported, are fine, and represent delicate combinations of color. The tiny arming designs are found in very fine goods of all grades —those of pure wool as well as mixed silk and wool.

For the million are mixtures of cotton and wool woven loose; make them soft, showing all the colors and patterns of the nicer goods. These or fancy cross-bars are quite in order, and there is an attempt to carry out more marked designs of stripes and bars than are found in the finer fabrics. These will be sold for fifty cents a yard, and are of single width. More useful than these are the modest beiges, either plainly woven or twilled; these are imported in lighter shades of gray and brown than have been used hitherto.

The fancy for roughly-twisted materials reaches its height in the new grenadines, as these are knotted, twisted, thickened threads are seen on grounds of every design in the Mexicaine squares, in the plain canvas meshes, in brocades, in stripes, and in plaids. There are many black grenadines with armure grounds and with grape-like effects, but those with the heavier patterns are not largely imported. The striped grenadines have first a moss stripe, then a stripe of open lace-like figures. The brocaded designs are small, in diamond or lozenge shape, or else in flower sprays. The colored grenadines show all the rich India colors as quaintly combined as they already described for woolen goods. It is scarcely possible to find any of single weave, but there are to be later importations of the rough-threaded grenadines in dark myrtle-green, indigo-blue, moss, seal-brown and steel-gray. These will be made up, as the Mexicaines of last year were, over silks of the same shade.

Cashmeres are staple goods, and are largely imported. They come in the stylish dark colors, and in pale tints for children's dresses. There are also many armure and basket-woven goods made of the finest cashmere wools; the quadrille and honey-comb cloths are also among these.

Soft-finished percales, cambrics and toile d'Alsace cannot have raised rough threads, as their surfaces are necessarily smooth, but they are printed in precisely the same gorgeous India colors seen in richer fabrics, and the designs aim to represent the garrls, rings and irregular threads also. Occasionally some of these designs develop stripes and cross-bars, but they are mere adjuncts merely the mixed bourette figures: there are a few with white grounds, but the majority have dark blue, seal brown, or black backgrounds mostly hollie by the gay colors thrown upon them. Bordered percales are largely imported, some of these are gay bourette figured borders, with plain percale for the body of the fabric, while others are just the reverse a plain border to figured percale. There are also the tiny square dots or points for children's dresses, and some have granite effects in gray grounds, with bars or dashes of blue and of rose.

Organdies and lawns will be greatly worn. They have plain tinted grounds with borders of flowers, fern leaves, holly, daisies and grasses that look as if painted by hand. The grounds are white, blue, or else solid pink, or with cream-colored flowers, or turquoise blue strewn with white daisies. Others of sulphur color, with plaids of leaves of the same shade, or violets on lilac grounds, are very pretty, and still others have black grounds with chintz figures.

Scotch ginghams of the fine qualities sold at forty cents a yard have borders or dashes of color overgrounding the stripes and checks that are usually seen in this excellent fabric. The Scotch zephyr cloths have new hair-like stripes of white with alternate lines of colors in pretty contrasts, and in the prevailing combinations.—Harper's Bazar.

Indian Sign-Language.

It is not generally known that the Indians of our plains have a common language of signs—one perfectly understood by all. Such, however, is the curious fact. It undoubtedly grew out of the necessity arising from their distinct dialects, which are as many and as different as there are tribes. The knowledge of this sign-language is a number of one tribe to a member of another that they can no more understand each other orally than a Sandwich-Islander can understand a Russian. There seems to be not even words in their languages which have common roots. It is singular when it is remembered that there are no natural barriers between the tribes. War is almost constantly carried on, and common intercourse, and yet, up to within a few years, they have kept to their respective languages, more particularly preserving their dialects. Out of this has grown their sign-language. Not only can they convey the usual questions and answers of travelers when chance to meet—queries such as "Who are you?" "Where are you going?" "How is the crop?" "How is the game?" but thoughts, opinions and declarations with shades of meaning. An incident, illustrative of this occurred last winter, when the delegations went to Washington from the Red-Cloud and Spotted-Tail Agencies. The two representatives from several tribes, and among them one of Arapahoes. This language, it is said, no white man or half-breed has ever learned. Friday, an old Arapahoe Chief, was their interpreter. He had been sent to St. Louis when a boy, but unfortunately made his way back to his tribe. Old Friday, in return by civilized hospitality, was drunk, and got to be found when it came little Wound's turn to talk to the several tribes for his people. Of course, here was a dilemma. It was overcome, however, by Lieut. Clarke, who was in charge of the entire delegation. The Lieutenant, placing himself in front of the Chief, signed for him to go ahead. He did, and, by means of this sign-language, which Lieut. Clarke understands perfectly, Little Wound made an eloquent appeal for justice to his people. Sentence by sentence the Lieutenant gave the Freedmen this Indian's pretty eloquent address.

The Indian sign-language is not a spelling-out of words, of course, as they have no alphabet. It is partly arbitrary, but mostly consists of signs which naturally indicate the desired meaning. For instance, the verb to see this is made by viewing the diagram of the hand (right generally) excepting the first and second; these extended are placed before the face and the hand moved outward. This, with other signs, is used positively or negatively, and in the past, present and future tenses. Being of the simplest forms, it can readily be seen how easily such a language could be learned, and how useful if the many civilized tongues amongst those who have neither the time nor ability to learn to speak a foreign tongue.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

THE trade in dead dogs is lively in some parts of Connecticut. Enterprising youths are collecting the tails and ears of vagrant canines necessary to secure the $1 bounty. It is even said that these articles of dog apparel have already become a circulating medium, and that one cruel father has gathered enough from his boy to train for a barrel of flour. So does Connecticut thrift make good come out of the dog evil.

A POSTMISTRESS in Maine "happened" to have a letter in her hand when it flew open. She wasn't to blame, of course, and yet she was fined $100 and cost. Beware of "fly-overs."

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—The threadbare story about a clothing-dealer who cautioned a customer against mentioning the terms of his bargain to the dealer's partner, as the latter was subject to the heart disease, is suggested by an accident occurring recently in Connecticut. Samuel Calhoun, a cigar-manufacturer, aged forty-five, when offered an unusually low price for his tobacco, suddenly fell insensible, and has since died from the shock.

—The other night, at Oshkosh, Wis., three fellows laid a plan to cheat out a fourth at poker. The victim was dealt four aces, to induce him to bet, but was given six cards, so as to make a misdeal. But "grocery" backed his four for all he was worth and won; and his opponent charged him with having unbeknown secreted about his person. A search revealed nothing, and he departed with his winnings. It was afterward found out that he had slipped the extra card into a sandwich which he was eating while the play was going on, and had actually eaten up the justest.

—The St. Joseph (Mo.) Chronicle says: "Speaking, the other day, of a singular personage of singular habits, a gentleman of this city related one of the facts, stated that he knew a citizen of Mercer County, this State, who owned a farm of more than a thousand acres, and the head of a family, who, for fifteen years past, had lived with his wife and children in a house without windows or doors, all this time he had not washed his face or hands; and that through a ridge of dirt on top of his head his hair had grown like long bristles, which he occasionally clipped, as stockmen rosch their mules."

—At Memphis, Tenn., a few mornings ago, a negro called at the jail, and demanded permission to see a comrade confined there. Jailer Dawson refused, and the negro began abusing him in a violent manner. Dawson, seizing a revolver, fired; but, missing the negro, the ball went through the glass front of Cornelius Grilling's grocery, corner of Overton and Front streets, some 200 yards distant, and struck Mr. Grilling just below the heart, as he was standing in the room. He turned and ran into an adjoining room, and, falling into the arms of his wife, exclaiming, "Oh, Kate, I'm killed!" soon expired.

—A little Eureka, Nev., woman awoke the other night to find a burglar prospecting her room for valuables. Drawing her pistol from under the pillow quietly until he had concluded his labors and transferred operations to the adjoining room, where she quietly arose, armed herself with a revolver (which her husband had provided her with, and which was strongly suspected of being concealed about his person). Covering him with the weapon, without a tremor in her voice, she commanded him to lie down his plunder. There was blood in her eye and determination in her voice, and the lord forgave everything at once. He deposited on the center-table a bracelet, lost, gold chain, and pair of earrings, all of which he had appropriated to his own use, and meekly listened to a spirited lecture which the lady delivered impromptu. She wound up her address by expressing a regret that her sonny pellet prevented her from escorting him to the jail, and ordered him out of the house. He did so, and upon the order of his going, but went at once. The brave little woman then dressed, lit her lantern, and went to the furnace to hold her husband of her adventure, and remained until daylight."

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Gen. Joe Johnston is a Congressional candidate from the Richmond (Va.) District.

—Whittier wrote to one friend protesting against being congratulated on attaining old age, which means stinking rheumatism.

—Five feet one inch; 140 pounds; bright and sharp gray eyes; action quick and nervous, cool mood. That is the Widow Oliver as seen by the Washington Post reporter.

—Mark Twain has a new dog which he has named "Joe Cook," and this explains the reason why: "I call him Joe Cook because I can't quite understand him. There are some solid pints in dog's nature that I haven't fathomed."

—The pugilistic John Morrissey's wife found him about ready to throw up the sponge when she reached Florida, but went to work and backed him with an invigorating decoction of watermelon seeds, and brought him up to the scratch and back to time again.

Faint heart ne'er won a fair lady. The Los Angeles (Cal.) Star relates that a couple of youthful swain in that locality, being under age, and consequently unable to obtain a license, hired a skiff, embarked a minister and sailing out to sea were married beyond the three-mile limit over which the United States has jurisdiction, and there the knot was tied.

—When Abraham Lincoln was a poor lawyer, he found himself one cold day on a village some distance from Springfield, Ill., and with no means of conveyance. Seeing a gentleman driving along the Springfield road in a carriage, he run up to him and politely said: "Sir, will you have the goodness to take my overcoat to town for me?" "With pleasure," answered the gentleman. "But how will you get it again?" "Oh, very easily," said Mr. Lincoln. "As I intend to remain in it." "Jump in," said the gentleman, laughing, and the future President had a pleasant ride.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—An agricultural paper published in Denmark gives a plan for assisting Nature in the manufacture of ice when the winter is mild. As it takes intense cold to make ice more than three or four inches in thickness, the Danish journal proposes to make holes in the ice, and by the use of portable pumps, flood the already frozen surface with a shallow layer of water every evening, which speedily freezes. In this way the ice harvest can be forced to almost any extent.

—The following bits of agricultural wisdom are from the Iowa State Register:

A farmer should determine what it is necessary to be done, then do it.

Cultivate farms in summer; but cultivate the mind in winter.

A farmer's eye among his stock is worth more than his hands.

Labor is not only essential to success, but to found happiness.

Do up the chores. Many of these days are good to chop up wood for next summer.

Agriculture has heretofore been a battle in darkest night. Is it nearly daylight?

Horticulture is the refinement of farming, and floriculture is the poetry of agriculture

The farmer is no ten-hour man. No shop or factory whistle calls him to work. He is his own freeman.

Any man who leaves a business solely because it is hard work is on the road to destruction.

No man can succeed in any calling unless he puts energy and enthusiasm into his business.

We never knew a farmer who kept out of debt, going into bankruptcy or complaining of hard times.

There are 4,000,000 voting farmers in the United States. Ask unitedly and you can get whatever you ask.

If our stock-breeders and speculators would not forget that they are farmers, there would be less cases of rollapse.

Talk of sweat of the brow. The farmer who leaves a farm to spend his days in idleness, proves conclusively that he is not adapted to any business, and will be, sooner or later, a failure.

Spend your leisure hours in making valuable improvements on the farm, or reading something on the farm, instead of spending it on goods boxes in towns.

Shiftlessness on the Farm.

Tumble-down fences or fences cleanly propped up and half painted, here and there, with bits of broken boards and rails; gates hanging by one hinge, or leaning forward, shiftlessly propped with some at all—these are some of the signs by which even he who runs may read the story of many a farmer's misfortunes for every shiftless fence. Shiftlessness is a common intercourse, and yet, up to within a few years, they have kept to their respective languages, more particularly preserving their dialects. Out of this has grown their sign-language. Not only can they convey the usual questions and answers of travelers when chance to meet—queries such as "Who are you?" "Where are you going?" "How is the crop?" "How is the game?" but thoughts, opinions and declarations with shades of meaning. An incident, illustrative of this occurred last winter, when the delegations went to Washington from the Red-Cloud and Spotted-Tail Agencies. The two representatives from several tribes, and among them one of Arapahoes. This language, it is said, no white man or half-breed has ever learned. Friday, an old Arapahoe Chief, was their interpreter. He had been sent to St. Louis when a boy, but unfortunately made his way back to his tribe. Old Friday, in return by civilized hospitality, was drunk, and got to be found when it came little Wound's turn to talk to the several tribes for his people. Of course, here was a dilemma. It was overcome, however, by Lieut. Clarke, who was in charge of the entire delegation. The Lieutenant, placing himself in front of the Chief, signed for him to go ahead. He did, and, by means of this sign-language, which Lieut. Clarke understands perfectly, Little Wound made an eloquent appeal for justice to his people. Sentence by sentence the Lieutenant gave the Freedmen this Indian's pretty eloquent address.

The Indian sign-language is not a spelling-out of words, of course, as they have no alphabet. It is partly arbitrary, but mostly consists of signs which naturally indicate the desired meaning. For instance, the verb to see this is made by viewing the diagram of the hand (right generally) excepting the first and second; these extended are placed before the face and the hand moved outward. This, with other signs, is used positively or negatively, and in the past, present and future tenses. Being of the simplest forms, it can readily be seen how easily such a language could be learned, and how useful if the many civilized tongues amongst those who have neither the time nor ability to learn to speak a foreign tongue.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

THE trade in dead dogs is lively in some parts of Connecticut. Enterprising youths are collecting the tails and ears of vagrant canines necessary to secure the $1 bounty. It is even said that these articles of dog apparel have already become a circulating medium, and that one cruel father has gathered enough from his boy to train for a barrel of flour. So does Connecticut thrift make good come out of the dog evil.

A POSTMISTRESS in Maine "happened" to have a letter in her hand when it flew open. She wasn't to blame, of course, and yet she was fined $100 and cost. Beware of "fly-overs."

his kitchen garden may be neglected, or left to the care of the women and children; and as to what he would call "posy" beds, his geese and chicks ran at will over the only spot where these could be located; the siding may be worn from his barn; his smaller outbuildings may be dooriless; his wagons, plows and harrows, without paint and exposed to the weather, may serve as roosting-places for his fowls; buckrakes and "stick-tights" may make rampant growth along the pathways and among the berry bushes in the garden; all these things he regards as matters of no account, and if you refer to them as marks of shiftlessness, he has only to point to his bulging cornerribs and beehstacks to refute the charge. And the smile with which he does it is enough to make you resolve never to try to open another man's eyes while you live. What matters a few burdocks anyhow? If you object to them as something particularly obnoxious, he will tell you with another smile that the way burdocks grow on a piece of land is the best kind of a sign that it is what that land is good for. Show him a farm where burdocks grow as if they had no business there, and he'll show you a farm he don't want to own.

If his wife complains that she can't get out doors with or having to put her skirts through a picking process to rid them of burs, he has a smile for her, too, with the information that country ladies can't expect to have everything as "slick" as they do in cities, which, may be, she believes and may be she doesn't. Women, nowadays, have a hard enough time to exercise their own opinion on such matters, and if it was not that they likewise "exercise" butcher knives, open cutters and such like implements occasionally, the traveler along country roads would see more burdocks, thistles and mullens than roses growing in farmers' dooryards.

Now a word about these same dooryards. Why is it that they are so generally neglected? The fault may rest in a great degree, but not altogether, with the women. Some small shrubs or berry are out of the question where the yard is used as it frequently is, as a sort of convenience for a passage from the road to the barns and sheds in front of everything brought in, from a load of hay in a drove of pigs. Fancy a tulip or a pansy trying to open its tender petals among the litter of such a dooryard! Nothing but "Live-for-ever," Hindoo grass or Shoo-fly bag could make a pretense of growing there. And try how you may to bring about a tidy, well-kept and sodded yard, either exclusive in the way of grass or flower plots, the front door-yard is the last place where farm-house which can be made available for this purpose.

That farmers' wives, take them as a class, should care so little for trees and flowers and shrubbery is to be regretted, and that chiefly for their own sakes. They need their soothing and refining influence, of which in their isolation and in the hard work of their every-day life, they stand in peculiar need. The changes in society of all grades the impossibilities of getting help, the constant drudgery of cooking, washing and ironing, the trials of all kinds—these are some of the causes which may regard as among the most potent why so many women fail to dig up and set out a tree, than it really is. Any woman possessed of ordinary strength, and health and love of the better for doing it. And as to flowers—well, they don't want them, or they would find a way to have them. We wonder seriously, sometimes, how some persons are to enjoy Heaven, when they care so little for all beauty here, whether it consists in flower, stream or wood.—Chr. Rural New Yorker.

Uses of Straw.

After having witnessed the enormous waste of straw in these United States for more than thirty years, at last I rejoice in seeing that our farmers begin to find out their folly in ignoring straw as something of great value in farming. He must think I place no great a value on straw; it can hardly be done. I speak from a lifelong experience, reaching over just a century. From my earliest recollection in the old country where I began my agricultural career, I have witnessed the usefulness of straw as a bedding, litter and absorbent. It is a universal mistake to let grain get too ripe before cutting, injuring the grain and straw. When grain is in the dough days, as a rule, are given to exercise their own opinion on such matters, and, if it was not that they likewise "exercise" butcher knives, open cutters and such like implements occasionally, the traveler along country roads would see more burdocks, thistles and mullens than roses growing in farmers' dooryards.

—SAN FRANCISCO now figures with a population of 330,000. "The only discouraging feature of this population," the San Francisco Chronicle says, "is the presence of so many non-assimilating Mongolians. Ten year ago there were 22,000 of them here, and there are probably about 40,000 now, nearly all of whom are males. This reduces the white population to 290,000. In 1870 there were 100,550 white males over twenty-one years of age, and the present number is about 111,000. While the number of Chinese would not be of any great consequence if there were as many white children among them as among the whites, the fact is that out of a total Chinese population of 40,000, about 35,000 are adult males, making one-fourth of the total adult male population of the city, is full of significance. It shows the nature of the competition our laboring men have to withstand."

A HYDE PARK, Vt., school-ma'am is in trouble. She undertook to break her pupils of using tobacco by keeping up a number of old pipes and giving some of the resulting matter to the offenders, which not only made the little boys very sick, but their parents very mad, and seriously impairs the usefulness of the school.

A HOSTON bachelor is said to own a dress-coat which has been loaned on twenty-three occasions to as many bridegrooms to get married in.

Mt. Vesuvius.

Should an eruption occur in this volcano, and cause the destruction or flight of the inhabitants who live in the vicinity, the remainder can be barely escape with their lives, immediately move back upon the half-cooled lava, and in a very short time, by the constant fear of another eruption, foolishly dare the fate by cultivating a portion of the earth rests within the range of the great volcano. The fidelity illustrates the force of habit, and the persistency with which people cling to opinions when once formed. For example, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been proved, by repeated failures to which they can refer. And although Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is said under a positive guarantee to cure all diseases for which it is recommended, notwithstanding that thousands of women bear testimony to its efficacy, and the truth of all statements made concerning it, many yet subscribe to the old, caustic and the knife. Again, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, no larger than mustard seeds, will positively cure biliousness, sick headache, dizziness, sour stomach, and torpid liver; yet some still depend for relief upon the "thing-a-me-bobs" and use of drastic cathartic medicines. In the face of such facts, can we wonder at the blindness of the poor Rattans?

CONSUMPTION.—For the cure of this distressing disease there has been no medicine yet discovered equal to Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. Its wonderful power over this disease has been fully tested by the medical faculty. The balsam is, consequently, recommended by physicians, and has become acquainted with its great success.

The Best and Most Economical.

Housekeepers are giving the change, shutter-ated baking powders "a wide berth," and what! Because experience has taught them that an absolutely pure, full-strength, full-weight article, such as Dooson's Yeast Powders, which never fails to produce light, wholesome and nutritious biscuits, rolls, muffins, waffles and griddle cakes, is the best, and by far the cheapest and most economical.

THE DRIVING PARK.—The adjourned meeting of citizens held Saturday evening to perfect arrangements for the establishment of a Fair Ground and Driving Park, was quite well attended. It was thought best to purchase a location for said ground, instead of leasing, and a committee consisting of Samuel M. See, J. M. Eaton, and A. J. McLeod was appointed to look up a suitable location and report at the meeting to be held in two weeks. They have now pledged for this purpose about $400. The organization, when effected, will be known as the "Charlevoix Agricultural, Driving and Rolling Park Association."

Dr. Charles A. Perrin left on the stage last Tuesday morning on his way to Charlevoix, where he intends locating and entering upon the practice of his profession. Dr. Perrin, although a young man, is not entirely without experience having studied with his brother, Dr. I. A. Perrin, of this village, and has had advantages not enjoyed by every student. He has also attended the well known Iowa Medical college at Keokuk, Iowa. Of studious habits, he has attended diligently to his studies, and, by those competent to judge, is pronounced better posted in his profession than many who have had years of practice. We can cordially recommend him to the citizens of Charlevoix as a genial gentleman, and one who we believe, will be an honor to the profession.—Cheboygan Tribune

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, cold and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, and the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist for, W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 50c.

LETZERIE NOTICE.

Charlevoix Mich., Feb. 11, 1878.

Notice is hereby given that at the Circuit Court to be held at the first Monday of April next, for hearing Amendments to the Constitution of the State are to be submitted to the People of the state, for their adoption or rejection, viz.: An Amendment to Section 12 of Article 6, relative to the appointment of Clerk of the Supreme Court, as provided by Joint Resolution No. 30, Laws of 1877. Said section now reads as follows:

Section 12. The Clerk of each County organized for judicial purposes, shall be Clerk of the Circuit Court of such county.

Also to Amendment to Sec. 7 of Article 14, relative to corporations, as provided by Joint Resolution No. 31 Laws of 1877. Said section now reads as follows:

Section 7. The stockholders of all corporations shall have such proportion of their stock exchangeable shares in corporations formed under general laws of this state, as the amount of their stock in corporations existing at the adoption of this constitution may bear to the whole amount of capital stock of such corporations.

Ballot proposed Amendment to be adopted by those who favor the same.

Section 7. The stockholders in all corporate and joint stock associations shall be individually liable to their creditors to an additional amount equal to the amount of their stock therein at the par value thereof, for all debts and liabilities of the corporation.

Ballot proposed Amendment to be adopted by those who favor the same.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand this 11th day of Feb. A. D. 1878.

County Clerk.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage dated the 15th day of December, A. D. 1874, made and executed by Mary Ann Lewis, of Charlevoix, Michigan, to Charlevoix County, Michigan, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, in Liber 3 of Mortgages, on page 429, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Six Hundred and Sixteen Dollars and Thirty-seven cents, and no attorney's fee of fifteen dollars provided to be paid in case any proceedings be taken to foreclose said mortgage by sale and no suit having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now Therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 16th day of March, A. D. 1878, at one o'clock at the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder at the Court House in the Village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is now at the premises described in said mortgage, or as much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said Mortgage, with interest per cent. thereon, as well as legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of fifteen dollars provided for in said mortgage, in case proceedings be taken to foreclose the same by advertisement.

To Whom It May Concern.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned Corporation—The Carp River Improvement Company—a corporation organized and existing by virtue of a law of the State of Michigan, entitled, "An Act to authorize the formation of corporations for the purpose of improving the new cutting of rivers," approved April 4th, 1865, did, on the 26th day of December, 1877, submit to the Board of County of the County of Chippewa, in the State of Michigan, a map or plan of the portions of Carp River to be improved by said Company, showing the several points in its course where the improvements are to be made, and the nature and character of such improvements; which said map or plan is now on file with the Clerk of said Board, and made application to said Board for their approval thereof, and their assent to said proposed improvements.

That the said Board did designate the 27th day of February next—Wednesday—at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day—being the hour of a regular meeting of said Board—at the Court House and Board of County of Chippewa, in the State aforesaid, as the time and place for hearing and determining the matter of said application, at which hearing all parties interested therein may appear and be heard.

PROBATE ORDER—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 27th day of January A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Nathaniel F. Youmans deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie E. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon, It is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all others interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

J. MILO EATON, Judge of Probate.

AN APOLOGY.—We have been asked to retract a statement made two weeks ago that Mr. Dixon received a commission on the extravagant order for blank books given to the Kalamazoo Publishing Company by that gentleman when County Clerk. Investigation seems to show that Mr. Dixon made nothing off these orders for the very good and only effective reason that no opportunity was offered him to make anything out of it. There is not a cent due about it now, however. Won't the County Clerk look over the records and ascertain if there was not a bill presented to the Board of Supervisors about that time for extra services in behalf of the Kalamazoo Publishing Company.

—Rev. H. P. Blake, of the Norwood circuit, has just closed a series of meetings at the Bersarel appointment in which about twenty persons have sought and found the Lord.

ICE.—There is every probability that an ice famine will fall upon the people of Charlevoix before the warm weather leaves us next summer. Several of our citizens succeeded in putting up a small quantity of thin ice from Pine Lake last week, but the warm weather has put a stop to the harvest.

Look out for new spring goods. The long part of the firm of Carpenter & Bartholomew has gone to Chicago.

FISH.—During a part of the last week herring in marvelous numbers have been caught, with hooks and lines, from our harbor docks. They are an excellent fish and many have been caught which were as large as an average sized white fish.

THE RIVER.—The condition of the mouth of the lower river is not discouraging. The least depth of water is between the piers where there is eight feet for a distance of fifty feet from the pier end. The channel at the entrance will be found well toward the south pier. The upper river has a depth of seven or eight feet throughout, excepting a short distance at the mouth, where there is six and one half feet. This can easily be removed, is necessary.

REAL ESTATE CHANGES.—Received for record for the week ending Mar. 5th, 1878.

BE it in high or low places, the SENTINEL will strike a rotten spot where it finds it, and expose a fraud or an incompetency whether any and wherever it appears. And if the same group of moss-head "reformers" come to the front next fall in the same role in which they made such miserably foolish asses of themselves this spring, they may expect tougher handling than their most uncomplimentary opinion of us would lead them to expect. "Satan rebuking sin" has its counterpart in certain places of Charlevoix county politics; but the parallels differ in one particular.—Satan is as cunning as the devil, while his terrestrial imitations are as stupid as geese, and about as interesting. When the signatures of certain petitioners have to face their record they fade and die. And we desire also to remark that when these "signatures" attempt to "climb" the editor of this paper for any editorial remarks made in these columns, they waste their breath and add fuel to the flame.

SPRING has not "burst upon us," for it has been here all winter; but spring is here, nevertheless. Round Lake is perfectly clear of ice, and Pine Lake is all ready to break up. As we look out upon broad Lake Michigan, no ice is seen, and the surf washes the beach unobstructed. It is a strange sight for us winse hungry folk, at this time of year, have been wont to watch the endless stretch of ice for a break up.

MARINE NEWS.—Capt. Goodrich has selected the propeller Menominee for his new summer route, mentioned some weeks ago. The steamer will touch, both going and coming, at all ports on the west shore from Chicago north to Manitowoc; also at the Manitou and Fox Islands, Northport, Charlevoix, Petoskey Mackinaw and Cheboygan—the round trip occupying about one week. The Menominee will be commanded by Capt. Kirkland, formerly of the tug Leviathan. Capt. Kirkland is a very skilful and popular lake captain, and his name will add strength to the enterprise. The steamer is expected to be on the route by the 20th of this month.

—The schooner W. A. Smith left for Mackinaw yesterday, with a miscellaneous cargo. This is the earliest clearance from this port for many years.

—The schooner Emma is being repaired and fitted out for the season's business.

—John Mason and John M. Ackert, of this place, will be Captain and Engineer, respectively, of the new steamer Gazelle

—Capt. Smith is engaged at the head of Pine Lake in excavating, and otherwise repairing the new Hercules, and expects to have her afloat soon.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

AMONG the bills introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 19th, was one to reorganize the lifesaving service and increase its efficiency. The bill granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the War of 1812 passed 42 to 8. In a debate on the bill to regulate the compensation of postmasters and for other purposes, several Senators expressed themselves in favor of the reorganization of the lifesaving privileges. The contested-election case of Darrall vs. Darrall, from the Fourth Louisiana district, was called up in the House, the majority report favoring the sitting member (Acklen) and the minority report being largely debated on the merits of Darrall. A compromise had been effected. The Louisiana affairs, to the course of which the Democrats in Northern reiley was freely discussed.

In the Senate, on the 20th, the bill to regulate the compensation of Postmasters, and for other purposes, was taken up, and an amendment was agreed to 25 to 23—providing that the President and Vice President, United States Senators, Representatives and Delegates in Congress, Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House, may send and receive free, through the mails, all written and printed communications not exceeding four ounces in weight. A further amendment was then agreed to, without division, granting the free transmission of official mail matter to all officers of the Federal Government, except Postmasters. After those who receive a fixed allowance as compensation for their services, including express and postage. The bill, as amended, was then passed.

In the House, the Louisiana contested-election case of Acklin vs. Darrall was again called up, and, after considerable debate, the majority resolution, declaring Acklin (contestant) elected and entitled to the seat, was adopted without division, and Mr. Acklen was then sworn in, taking the oath-desk.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 21st, to provide for a military post for the protection of the citizens of the Black Hills region. The House bill to authorize the granting of an American register non-foreign-built ship, for the purpose of the World fair steamship Edward Atwood the World, was reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute directing the issuing from the Secretary of the Treasury of the Interior, Bills were passed in the House—providing that when a vacancy shall have been created in the list of the judges of the courts of the State of Utah, no appointment shall be made to fill such vacancy; and establishing a term of the Supreme Court to be held at Keokuk, Iowa. Bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar—to prevent the unauthorized occupation of timber lands in Minnesota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Abercrombie military reservation in Dakota; to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands in Nebraska; to provide for the sale of the Fort Ridgely military reservation in Minnesota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Randall military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Sisseton military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Wadsworth military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Pembina military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Totten military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Buford military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Stevenson military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Berthold military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Abraham Lincoln military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Rice military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Yates military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Bennett military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Meade military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Randall military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Sisseton military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Wadsworth military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Pembina military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Totten military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Buford military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Stevenson military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Berthold military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Abraham Lincoln military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Rice military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Yates military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Bennett military reservation in Dakota; to provide for the sale of the Fort Meade military reservation in Dakota.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

Radix Sentinel:

New York, March 8, 1878.

There has seldom been a better illustration of how thoroughly good intelligent honest, intelligent men can differ in their opinions on the same subject, than is furnished by the silver question from since the Bland bill was introduced in Congress there has been incessant and bitter warfare in New York over its provisions, and that too as much between personal and partisan friends of two unfortunately views as can be found in any classes whom one would select with respect to find in parlor or social upon such a vital and apparently uncomplicated issue. At first sight it seems as though there must be some plain, simple explanation of the case, the correctness of which should be evident at once to any right minded person, and yet there has been no subject in the general literature within the memory of most persons that has thrown into antagonism so many honorable lawyers prudent business men, sharp journalists, and practical business men—all classes of thinking and intelligent men have been by the ears all these months, wrangling, disputing, giving and taking no quarter, and never yielding an inch in consequence, each side drawing, warm of short-cut sharpness and temper from the common elements of theory of political economy about which the lawyers are generally believed well with suggestion for time to clear out or unravel the Gordian knot.

And even now when the presidential vote has been borne down and overwhelmed by a two thirds vote, and the silver dollar is a fixed fact, and the financial earthquake which was freely prophesied still delays its coming, the strong cartest outlines to wage with scarcely abated vigor. Despite the storm constantly heaped upon Congress, it cannot be denied that the members of the national legislature are men selected from their various communities, in most cases on account of mental superiority; and it is difficult as well as unpleasant to believe that nearly three fourths of their whole number are the "corrupt idiots" that most of our newspapers call them. But on the other hand the writers who control these journals are men of great experience and observation and recognized authority, in that is scarcely cause, especially for those who daily get the benefit of their eloquent arguments, to set them down as "howling blatherskites" as the writers will have it that they are. Go into either of our large banks in succession and ask "How about silver?" The first president will tell you with righteous indignation that the silver dollar is national ruin and bagrace. No. 2 will enjoy with enthusiasm that the passage of the bill is a glorious thing for the country. No. 3 will answer that he don't know and don't care. to two millionaire merchants, one will tell you that silver is going down like lead and meteors—for up like a kite, while the other will assure you that in six months the lowest dollar will be above par and business better than any time since '73.

Under these circumstances what is to follow to the Patient, as good a way to say is to turn a deaf ear to all the theoretical conflict and wait to see how things do really turn out—as I am strikes me as being a sensible suggestion, I believe I, for one, will follow it.

The showing of the extravagance of all this city in paying its officials, which was recently made in the press and from which I quoted a few weeks since, seems to have been effectual in checking up the people and the Legislature to an extent which is likely to result in a salutary change. In fact, a reduction of 25 per cent, on all salaries over $2,000 has already been proposed at Albany, and, although it will naturally be fought to the bitter end by the harmless, it nevertheless stands a fair chance of going through. A reduction of 25 per cent on the aggregate of all the salaries paid by the city of New York, being $10,116,000, will save the city $2,529,195, and still leave many salaries much larger than there is any reason they should be under the existing conditions of our municipal civil service. A thorough and close analysis of the whole matter is not in order—and the community is not in a temper to stand a great deal of discussion on the subject.

SPORT FOR A KING.

The Bull-Fights in Madrid in Honor of Alfonso's Marriage.

The Madrid (Spain) correspondent of the New York Evening Post gives the following account of the bull-fights recently given in that city on the occasion of the King's marriage:

"The great event of the day, so anxiously expected, the apple of discord thrown among the members of the corporation, the friends of the members, and the friends of the friends of the members, etc. The description of the first bull-fight in one of the leading journals begins with these words, and I repeat them in order to enhance the value of the two tickets for each bull-fight secured by your correspondent. The people of Madrid, as had been feared and predicted, presented a very lowering front on the morning of the first bull fight, but before the hour of going to the amphitheater the rumor began to circulate among the crowd that there was going to be a third bull fight, at the expense of the city corporation, expressly for the soldiers and working people, to which there would be free admission for as many as the amphitheater would hold. This timely sop to Cerberus had the desired effect.

"The streets and avenues from the palace to the bullring were packed with people, leaving just space enough in the center for the carriages to pass. The King, Queen and Royal family drove through the crowd in eight carriages with superb appointments, but there was not a cheer or a cheer for any of them.

"Far be it from me to attempt a description of what has been described ad nauseam, and condemned of all right-feeling men. Nothing would have induced me to see it had I not felt myself in duty bound to report its incidents.

"The acaptio, however, on this occasion, was right never to be forgotten. The despejo at the end of clearing the ring of the people who always walk about it before the performances, and the presentacion to the public of the unpicadors are amusing performances.

"The great doors were flung wide open, and, instead of the procession of matched and gilded horses that are usually the first to enter the ring announced by the postilleros, appeared the four magnificent state carriages sent by the gran rey en Espana, and in each of which came a caballero en plaza. Each carriage was drawn by six horses in number, three and three abreast, and, as had been anticipated, the equipage of the Duke of Santoña far surpassed the rest in every respect. On the side of each carriage walked two of Spain's most famous bull-fighters, all fine-looking men, who keep themselves in training for the business much as prize-fighters do elsewhere. Behind the bull-fighters came the chulos, or assistants, with the horses of the caballeros saddled and accoutered in harmony with the period and costume, and four pages dressed in the costume of the fifteenth century bearing the rejoncillos. Each cuadrilla is composed of one bull-fighter, six banderilleros, two picadores, one puntillero, three chulos, and the six fancy little mules, all bells and tassels, with their drivers, that carry out the dead, and all of these individuals, a hundred or more, wearing the most picturesque dresses conceivable. Imagine all this brilliant cavalcade slowly passing around the ring; imagine the grades of the amphitheater from the pavement to the top of its walls compactly filled with people, looking more like a vast conservatory filled with the gayest flowers and brightest hues that fashion worn to los Toros are always of the brightest colors; imagine the royal box a moving mass of gorgeous uniforms, white veils, scarlet flowers and dresses and glancing jewels; below the royal box the serried ranks of the King's bullfighters, in their gay costumes, steel helmets and glittering halberds, and agree with me that it was a scene to be remembered for a lifetime, and to be matched in any other country, and, so far, well worth crossing an ocean to see. It took one back to the fifteenth century, with all its barbaric splendor, and farther back still, a few minutes later, to the days of the Roman Empire, when the unarmed fought and saw brave men blood to death in mortal combat with wild animals.

"The alguacil, mounted on the long, gone around the ring twice or thrice, the bull-fighters dedicating their swords to the King as they passed, the caballeros unfurled from their carriages and mounted their horses, all beautiful animals. Two of them remained in the plaza, while the other two retired behind the barrier until their turn should come. The caballeros wore the cavalier costume of the fifteenth century. The first that came into the ring wore a doublet of crimson velvet slashed with white satin, knee-breeches of the same, long boots reaching to the thighs and gray, broad-brimmed hat with ostrich plumes. The next wore scarlet and gold and yellow, the third wore purple and white, and the fourth sky-blue velvet embroidered with silver thread and skyblue satin.

"In sporting parlance, the corrida (bull fight) was a bad one. There were only eight horses killed by the bulls that were fought after these dedicated to the caballeros had been despatched.

"The part assigned to the caballeros en plaza on the occasion of a royal fête is that taken by the banderilleros in an ordinary bull-fight. These, on foot, at a given signal, and watching their chances, thrust short-barbed arrows into the bull's neck and sides for the purpose of infuriating him. The caballeros en plaza are to do this same thing, but they must do it on horseback and protect their horses and themselves, throwing the horse on its haunches, and instead of arrows they use the rejoncillo, a long, slender wand that breaks as they thrust the steel-barbed point into the cutaneb. And when the bull turns on them he is called off by the bull-fighters with the cloak, and the caballeros escapes or not, according to his own skill and the speed of his horse. They use one, two, three or four rejoncillos, according to circumstances, and then leave the ring, and the bull-fighter continues in the usual way until the "bitter end."

"The only noteworthy incident in yesterday's corrida was a bull's running after a caballero en plaza, reaching him and breaking his horse's hinder leg with one thrust of his horns. Imagine the sensation of seeing this happen to a beautiful animal, a moment before full of life and spirit, and as happy as the rest of us in the mere pleasure of living. And imagine, too, seeing such magnificent creatures as these bulls are fairly tormented and tortured into irony, then gradually become enfeebled as the knives them through a hundred wounds until they are finally killed. Some of them set from the beginning to the end as though possessed by an evil spirit, dealing death and destruction wherever they turn; but some of them (and this was the case to-day) hardly stop in the midst of their mad career and gaze calmly about them, gently bowing the while, and this sound is so incongruous, so suggestive of the green fields, running brooks and waving trees that the poor beast has lost for, that it seems as though it really was his mournful farewell to home and life.

"The remaining three caballeros en plaza were also wounded. One of the bulls fought afterward with puntores, upset an old white-headed bull-fighter three times, and the third time, when he had thrown him down, he quietly smelt him from head to foot, and with a mild sniff turned off to the other side of the ring.

"In the second fight, on the following day, the same corresponding saw—

"The caballeros en plaza were young, handsome and excellent horsemen. The bulls were very different from those of yesterday's corrida. They fought like tigers. The first one that came out went full tilt at everything he saw, and then attacked an alguacil, knocked his horse down and carried off the alguacil's hat.

"The second, bravely attacked by the caballero, wounded the horse, charged into the midst of the halberdiers, and, although wounded with the halberds, went back to them two or three times, actually biting them in his fury. The third, called by the sporting reporter in to-night's newspaper "an elephant with bayonets," was, in sporting parlance, "a rum customer—that is caught and tossed all that came within his line of vision. We are told in to-night's newspaper that several distinguished foreigners have bought the heads of the best bulls killed to-day and have ordered them to be stuffed, so as to preserve a souvenir of to-day's corrida."

Years.	Vessels passed through.	Tolls.
1876	1,491	$6,577 20
1877	1,467	6,799 90
1878	1,603	6,956 70

The counties and municipalities have paid as interest, to carry their part of the indebtedness, $1,089,978.63, and the State has paid on its part $280,046, making a total of $1,370,024.63.

THE Cleveland Leader has discovered that the Catholic Bishops of the United States hold $9,000,000 worth of property in 1878; in 1870, it say, this had increased to $60,000,000; now it is $110,000,000.

Library of the State Department at Washington.

The library is the gem of the bureau. Architecturally, the room is the pride of the building. The work is of iron, without any appearance of heaviness. The airy grace of the balconied interior is heightened by the pure white and delicate pearl-colored decorations, touched here and there with gilt. It is illuminated by a square dome, through which the softened sunlight falls upon the tiers of literary treasures. This library was founded by Jefferson in 1780, and many of the earlier purchases2 works bear his impress and autograph. It was in September of that year that the Secretary of State was empowered by Congress to procure the laws of the several States. Now one tier of the three roomy galleries is devoted exclusively to the collection of the laws of the States, and is very complete. The library contains the best and the largest collection of books relating to international affairs that can possibly be obtained, including the great work of Dumont on international law, the last ever published on the subject, and made up from the most ancient sources, and bringing all the known documents in the world; and the works of the great writers of all ages, down to the latest publication of to-day. We might mention as illustrative of the scope of this alcove, the magnificent folio statutes of the realm of Great Britain; "Hansard's Parliamentary Debates," in some 200 volumes; the State papers not only of Great Britain, but of other foreign countries; the "Mirror of Parliament," in twenty great volumes, upon which Charles Dickens was employed; a series of forty or more folios devoted to Russian law; and Thomas Pyaner's great work, which contains the treaties, leagues, manifestoes, capitulations, correspondence and other public documents of England and the various countries of the world. The department of history is equally full. Our National alcove has also done themselves credit by the manner in which they have collect jewels from all parts of the earth. Histories of all Nations and in all languages grasse the shelves. One curiosity is a universal history from the creation, published by Ambergh [Amsterdam?] printed in 1493. The cuts display singular artistic talent; they were executed by the master of Albert Durer, and before his time. The artist was so enamored of his own pictures that he often used the same one again and again, as in the case of a fine representation of Jupiter, which he afterward repeated for St. Paul. A later compilation is one "Abridged Universal History," produced in Japan. It contains historical sketches of all the Nations of the world, with portraits of distinguished public characters, which are quickly recognized in spite of Japanese peculiarity of execution. Charles II., Napoleon, Lincoln, Victor Emmanuel, Christopher Columbus, the Emperor of Russia, Washington, etc., etc. It is neatly printed in Japanese characters, and intended for the use of their normal schools. In the alcove devoted to biography, mentioning only the notable Frenchmen of every age indicate somewhat of the length of the catalogue. Martha J. Lamb, in Harper's Magazine for March.

The Fortifications of the Dardanelles.

A writer in the Allgemeine Zeitung says: "It is strictly forbidden at present a German mile (four English) broad. To the southeast is Lamsaki, on the Asiatic shore, the first appointed anchorage on the mouth of the Ægeopotamos, a little farther on the straits gradually become more narrow up to Sestos and Abydos, through all of the scenes of the story of Hero and Leander, and still more as the place where the Army of Xerxes had that of Alexander under Parmenion crossed to the European shore. The first Turkish fort is on the adjoining cape of Nagara-Burun.

"The straits then turn directly to the south, and here is their narrowest part, not quite two thousand metres' wide, which name by unimportant [illegible] or by these warranted through their nearness to call in a social manner. The opposite points of Europe and Asia, charming. Brilliant and cultivated men and women gather in little knots in different parts of the spacious and cheerful apartment, and wit sparkles and anecdote enlivens conversation. The President frequently disappears; he has a private library, where he relays down the huge Krupp guns presented by Herr Krupp to the late Sultan Abdul Aziz. The Castle of Tchanak-Kalessi commands the whole of the southern part of the Dardanelles up to the Ægean Sea; and it is therefore the central point of all the repetitive defences between Kum-Kaleh on the south and Gallipoli on the north.

Beside the above-named three batteries Medjidie, Kische-Burun and Nagara-Burun—have been recently armed with Krupp guns of various calibres and twenty- and six-and-thirty-pounders. Kilid-Bahri, on the European shore, formerly also had an imposing park of artillery consisting of old guns, which, however, were of but little practical use. Some of them bore the arms of the Venetian Republic, and there was an immense quantity of stone projectiles. These have all been removed, and most of the cannon have been replaced by Krupp guns, which are stated to be fifteen in number. There are also in the neighborhood of Kilid-Bahri three above batteries: Dermen Tabia, with eleven guns (including five Krupps); Teheri-Tabia, with seven guns, and Bouli-Tabia, with twenty old twelve and six-and-thirty-pounders.

"In proceeding southward from the Castles of the Dardanelles, one perceives on the Asiatic side a lofty and commanding shore, which has hitherto not been fortified, the site of the ancient Dardania, which has given its name to the straits. At the southern entrance to the Hellespont are no two forts of Kum-Kaleh and Sed-el-Bahri, the former on the coast of the Troad, and the latter at the extreme southerly end of the Thracian Chersonese. These forts were erected by Sultan Mohammed IV. in 1659, and they have lately been strengthened by several batteries on the Roumelian shore. Their position is not, on the whole, so favorable from a military point of view as that of the Castles of the Dardanelles, and Sedil-Bahri, from its isolated position, might easily be threatened by a land force coming from the shores of the Ægean.

"As to the question of the possibility of forcing a passage through the straits, the writer thinks that such an undertaking, though not absolutely impossible, could in the present state of the fortifications not be carried out by an iron-clad fleet without losing several of its ships. He believes, however, that, owing to the strength of the current, especially when a north wind is blowing, it would be scarcely possible to close up the channel by means of torpedoes."

Cricket in England.

No town in England, so far as I have observed, is too small to be without its common, or, as they style it, "green," and Ryemoor has one some three or four acres in extent. It is a triangular inclosure, lying between the two converging roads whereby the town is entered from the west and southwest. A few cattle are pastured upon it, but its principal function seems to be that of cricket and football grounds. During the cricket season, two or three regular matches, with whilte flannel and marquees are laid upon it, but the bulk of the year is, of course, devoted to "practice." Our own base-ball, which requests no animal more specially than cricket, has never held such sway over the active part of our community as has the latter game—or perhaps I should express it Anglicanism. Rich and poor, from dauntless infancy to decrepit age, they revel in it. One sees multimayed old men limping upon it, and I doubt if on which an American baseball ground would quickly compel either to cave in or retire. Cricket, too, is more fashionable here than is our game with us: though it has its professionals in abundance, that does not prevent the banker or the gentleman scholar at universities from practicing it as much as or more than ever. What most entertains me, however, is not the superficial aspects of the game, but rather the homely, ardent expeditions of the great schools and universities from practicing it as much as or more than ever. What most entertains me, however, is not the ultra-scientific, classical interpretation

The editor of the country N. Y. Packet, tells of a church society held when he was a boy, met to raise funds to purchase a new bell for the church, which strikes by 42 nine-inch diabolically-tough slugs of pewter accumulated as sacred relics from said bell regularly required to settle his nurse spoons. They were then collected and whose each piece was written a promise to pay a specified number of kisses on demand, and the slips thus obtained numbered. The pieces varied considerably in the number of kisses and the second sense of attractiveness of the signers gave extraordinary value to the "dime girls." Our church society might think over the matter and when all other means fail try the above. We'll patronize it.

A dispatch to a Chicago paper from Cheboygan, says: "Never before at this time of the year was there so little ice in the straits as at the present time, and on no former occasion has the passage of the straits been so beset with difficulties for tow-boats the mail carrier was unable to get across, and as a consequence a large quantity of mail matter detained from Mackinaw, Sault Ste. Marie and Canada accumulated at this point. Usually long before this the ice bridge is solid and safe for teams to cross, but this winter the ice, like the snow, has been long coming."

A meeting was held by Bell at Little Traverse to consider the matter of extending a branch road to that place. It was attended by Mr. Hughes and others, and the former said that if the people would build the road the railroad company would gladly operate it and only charge the cost of operation. He said it would cost, after it was graded and tied, about $22,000 to buy the iron and build the road, which amount would have to be raised in cash. It is very doubtful if Little Traverse will be able to grade and tie the road and then raise $22,000 for the iron.

On the waters of the Pere Marquette two loggers are operating near each other. A few days since one of them scraped up all the available snow in his vicinity for road purposes. Before the snow crop could be harvested, however, his neighbor appeared on the scene and treasfered the snow to cover his own road. Whereupon logger No 1 brought suit and recovered the snow. Meanwhile old Sol put in an appearance and dissolved the "plaintiff," thereby upsetting the claim of the party of the first part, who was thus unable to identify his property, and of course can recover costs not sued.—Saginaw Courier.

Hear what the New York Herald, (Independent) says:

"President Hayes has been nearly a year in office, and he must be a very self complacent as well as a very sanguine man if he thinks what he has accomplished in reforming the civil service is worth all it has cost him. By his vacillating, inconsistent course, which has won the approval neither of the true friends of civil service reform nor of the spoils-hunting politicians he has put himself in a state of humiliating position. He has failed to improve the civil service and at the same time he has stripped himself of influence to accomplish good in other directions. It is now plain to everybody that a petty President of the usual type would have been altogether more successful and more useful."

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 26th, the Vice-President being absent, a resolution was submitted that Senator Thurman be elected President pro tem. of the Senate. A motion to substitute the name of Mr. Thurman for that of Mr. Sherman was negatived—yeas, 29—36, Davis (Ill.) voting with the Democrats in the affirmative. The original resolution was then agreed to, and Mr. Ferry was escorted to the Chair by Mr. Thurman and retired his thanks for the honor conferred upon him. After the transaction of some unimportant business, the bill to authorize a long bond for the investigation of savings was called up, so that it should be unfinished business on the 27th.

In the House several memorials were presented and a bill was passed providing that no case of the death or resignation of a Person Against the President may temporarily operate to supersede the Attorney-General in the case of the President's Southern policy, in reply to a speech by Mr. Hale made the previous week by the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union, Mr. Biddle made a lengthy speech on the financial question, advocating the full restoration of the silver dollar of 412½ grains.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 27th ult., to provide for the entry of lands in Indiana under the Homestead law, to establish the rank of Inspector-General of the United States Army. The House bill providing that in case of the death, resignation or disability (pending after appointment of a Pension Agent, the President may temporarily appoint a successor, was, after considerable discussion, amended and passed—48 to 9. Bills were passed in the House authorizing the Secretary to renew the coast-survey of Long Island Sound; in the case of exchanges of the 1854 issue, and to annul the same, and place Dr. Hammond on the retired list as Surgeon-General, but without giving him any right to pay, present emoluments, or a life-tenure; also, appointing commissioners to the Territory of Idaho. The bill authorizing the widows of the Mexican War was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

WHEN NEWS was received in the Senate, on the 28th ult., that the House had passed the Silver bill over the President's veto, after some discussion, a motion was agreed to for postponing pending and all prior orders and proceed at once to consider said bill. The bill and veto were then read and a motion to lay them on the table was rejected, after which the bill was passed over the veto—46 to 29. The bill authorizing a special term at the United States Circuit Court in the Southern District of Mississippi was passed, after discussion—30 to 15. Adjourned to the 1st. During the session of the other business in the House the President's Message vetoing the Silver bill was received, and immediate action was taken thereon, the previous question being seconded and the main question ordered. A motion was made to lay the message and the accompanying papers on the table, which was lost—106 to 78—the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendatory veto of the bill was received with general handclapping and other marks of gratification. The bill to pension soldiers of the Mexican and Indian Wars was further considered in Committee of the Whole.

THE SENATE was not in session on the 1st. Several private bills were passed in the House. A bill was introduced and referred to aid the Southern Railroad Company in the construction of lines of railway in Georgia and Florida. The bill to prevent aggression in foreign countries by fishermen was made the special order for the 4th of March, at 2 o'clock.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 4th, to authorize the deposit of silver bullion or bars, and the issue of certificates therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury, in sums of not less than twenty dollars in the same form as that provided for certificates for gold coin; to authorize the payment of duties on imports and all public dues to any person who may present to Receivers of the same who were entitled as stated. The House bill appropriating the proceeds of certain property captured by Confederate cruisers was passed. The House bill providing for the payment of pensions to Volunteers who were entitled to the same was further considered. The House bill making appropriations for the payment of the pensions for the year ending June 30, 1878, was passed. Adjourned to the 5th.

IN THE Senate, on the 5th, Mr. Sherman called up and, after discussion, secured the passage of a bill to pay the salary of Hon. Samuel C. Pomeroy, Senator from Kansas, as agreed to, and the bill was passed. Mr. Allison (on a recent being authorized), referred to the Committee on Finance. In the House, bills were introduced—for the encouragement of commerce of the United States by United States ocean, reducing the number of Customs districts and regulating their compensation; appropriating $20,000 for defraying on the Internal Commerce Bureau for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878; to regulate immigration; establishing rules and salaries of the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the House whether he had instructed the sale of any lands for containing legal tender notes or any, selling the current New York premium in gold and the commission for selling or whether he had authorized the sale of such loans for legal-tender notes on any other basis than above stated; and, if so, the number and amount of the proceeds of such loans, and who was employed as agents in disposing of them; the Senate bill amending the laws granting pensions to officers and soldiers of the War of 1812 was passed—21 to 21.

As it required a two-thirds vote to pass the bill, the yeas, to be equal, were two-thirds of the measure with negative opponents, and they were announced as follows: Oglesby and Ransom, who would have voted in the affirmative, and Cameron (Wis.), Logan and Sherman, who would have voted in the negative. Conkling, Dorsey and Armstrong, who would have voted in the affirmative with Edmunds, Frelinghuysen and Morton, who would have voted in the negative. Christiancy and Burnside were absent.

The President pro tempore, in announcing the vote, said: "Two-thirds of the Senate having voted in its favor, the bill is passed, and has become a law."

Why He Vetoed the Silver Bill.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, }
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 28, 1878. }

To the House of Representatives:

After very careful consideration of House bill 1,505, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character," I feel compelled to return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my objections to its passage. Holding the opinion which I expressed in my annual message, "that neither the interests of the Government nor the people of the United States would be promoted by disregarding silver as one of the two precious metals which furnish the coinage of the world, and that legislation which looks to maintaining the volume of intrinsic money as full a measure of both metals as their relative commercial values will permit, would neither be unjust nor inexpedient," it has been my earnest desire to concur with Congress in the adoption of such measures as would increase the silver coinage of the country as much as practicable, and to secure to the silver dollar, whether of gold or paper, which from time to time may be in circulation among the people, the quality of a perfect legal tender in the payment of all debts, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract. It is such legislation only that will fully restore to silver its old place in our currency, and keep it there. Holding these views, I am unable to approve the present bill. It fails to secure the free coinage of silver dollars, which is the first step to be taken in the restoration of silver to its proper place in our currency. It provides for the purchase of not more than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month, and for the coinage of not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 per month into silver dollars. The amount of silver to be purchased and coined is entirely inadequate to the requirements of the public trade. It is not enough to prevent a further fall in the price of silver bullion, and consequently a further fall in the market value of the silver dollar. It is not enough to keep the silver dollar in circulation with gold coin. It is not enough to prevent the accumulation of silver dollars in the Treasury to the serious embarrassment of the operations of the Government. It is not enough to prevent the recoinage of silver certificates into silver dollars, and the issue of silver certificates of small denominations, which would keep the silver dollar in circulation among the people. It is not enough to prevent the contraction of the currency by the retirement of United States notes. It is not enough to prevent the entire displacement of silver dollars by gold coin as the principal standard of value. It is not enough to prevent the payment of the bonds of the United States in silver dollars of greatly depreciated value. It is not enough to prevent the creditors of the United States, who have bought their bonds in the belief that they were to be paid in gold coin, from being paid

The Domestic Life of a Naturalist.

"It's a jolly little brute, and won't hurt!" exclaimed Mr. Buckland, as we were about to retreat from the threshold. The monkeys had seized the jaguar's tail, and, lifting it with its hind legs bodily to the altitude of their cage, were rapidly denuding it of fur. No animal with any feelings of self-respect could submit silently to such humiliation, and the jaguar was making the place hideous with his yells. Hearing the cries of her pet, Mrs. Buckland came to the rescue; and it was amusing to see this child of the forest, with gleaming eyes and frantic tulips, cast itself at her feet and nestle meekly in the folds of her dress. She had nursed it, through a very trying babyhood when Mr. Bartlett had sent it from the Zoo, apparently dying and paralyzed in the fore-legs, with a promise of £25 reward for a cure. That sum has long since been swallowed up in damages for clothes and boots devoured, as the invalid's health and appetite returned. Hard by, a laughing jackass was sportively chasing live mice up and down a glass jar, as an appetizer before eating them, and below, solemnly weighing the doctrine of chances, a battalion of cats waited patiently, what might befall. At a front window an intelligent parrot kept calling cabs from the monument we entered, and was equally ready to hail an omnibus if we preferred it. A peaceably-disposed pickmid rat was enjoying gymnastic exercises on a gale until seized by the under end and told to "sing up, old boy." Held and dealy to our ear, melodious notes were heard issuing from the diaphragm, which Mr. Buckland considers as good as the carol of a lark, whether it arises from a parasite in the liver or not. Each round the walls were covered with the heads of curious hybrids and horns of extinct animals; and indeed there was everything in this wonderful museum to fascinate the mind from a shoe left as a keepsake by Brice the giant to a bird's nest floating about in a wine-glass of water. The latter was a beautiful little object like a fairy glass slipper, about an inch long, without heels, and exquisitely fringed and tinished off. It belongs to the jolly fish tribe, and was alive and well when we saw it.

The "happy family" life, of which Mrs. Buckland is the center, is carried on in an ordinary London house, formerly the home of Charles Dickens's father-in-law, Mr. Hogarth, in Albany street, Regent's Park. In their time the room into which we were ushered was probably the drawing-room. At first, during the present tenancy, it used to be called "master's room," and was intended for the owner's accommodation; but the monkeys soon made which Mr. Buckland remarks is Darwin going backward. The dining-room is now the study, and the drawing-room is the museum, "monkeys' room,"

Value of Reptiles.

The class of reptiles is generally regarded as useless, if not noxious to mankind; yet, in reality, it affords many and varied products which serve as human food, or as important substances in the arts and manufactures. The first of the reptiles to be mentioned in this light are the Chelonians, including the turtles and tortoises, whose flesh is every where esteemed as an article of diet, and whose eggs are sought both for eating and for the oil that they afford. Edible species of the tortoise and the turtle abound in America, and are largely consumed at home and export to foreign countries. A manufactory at Key West annually puts up 200,000 pounds of turtle-meat for exportation, and employs ten vessels and sixty men in collecting the reptiles. Large establishments for canning the meat, and preparing for market the fat, calipee and gelatinous portion of the lips of the turtle, exist in Jamaica. In 1874 the export from Jamaica of these products amounted to 5,484 pounds. The turtles consumed at this point are brought from the shores of the Gulf of Mexico, from Trinidad, Vera Cruz, Honduras and the Tortugas.

The turtle is an important article of subsistence to the inhabitants in the Galapagos Islands; and Mr. Bates, in his interesting notice of "A Naturalist on the Amazons," devotes a good deal of space to an account of the mode in which the Indians of that region kill the animal and its eggs. The great fresh-water turtle attains an immense size, and its flesh is tender and palatable. The reptiles are habitually kept by the Indians in little ponds, as a resource in seasons of dearth. The breeding-places of the turtle afford a busy spectacle at the time when it comes up out of the water to lay its eggs in the sand. The natives assemble from far and near, and swarm near the ground for the sake of convenience in harvesting the eggs and preparing the oil.

The destruction of turtle-eggs every year is, according to Mr. Bates, enormous. "A vessel of 200 tons burden, loading each three gallons of the oil, are exported annually from the Upper Amazons and the Madeira to Para, where it is used for lighting, with fish and other purposes. It may be fairly estimated that 2,000 more jarrils are consumed by the inhabitants of the villages on the river. Now, it takes at least twelve baskets of eggs, or about 6,000, to fry the quantity of produce required to make one jarril of oil. The total number of eggs annually destroyed amounts, therefore, to 48,000,000. As each turtle lays about 120, it follows that the yearly offspring of 400,000 turtles is thus annihilated."

Turtle-meal is another valuable product derived from the Chelonians. The finest variety is produced by the Hawk's-bill turtle. Twenty-five tons of this material are annually worked up in Great Britain.

The flesh and the eggs of the alligator and the crocodile are eaten by the natives in many parts of the world, while their skins are tanned and converted into leather for boots and shoes, horse-trappings, etc.; their teeth are carved into ornamental objects; the oil extracted from the fat is of considerable value in the arts; and a musk used in perfumery is obtained from certain species.

The flesh of the iguana is highly esteemed in South America, and is cooked in various ways. The eggs, which are very plentiful, are also regarded as a delicacy. Humboldt states that in intertropical South America, all lizards are found a very delicate food. Even the lizard dry places are much prized for the table.

The most highly civilized races regard the hind-quarters of the frog as an elegant dainty, but snakes are an universal consent considered unfit for food. Still the flesh of all land-serpents is said to be white, tender and well-flavored; while an excellent leather is manufactured from the skins of the anaconda and other large species.—Chicago Tribune.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A BABY'S SMILE.

As through the busy street I pass,
Often, at noon or time,
I mark some pleasant household group
Behind a window-pane;
The mother is publicly blind,
The father busy and sere,
But if I note a baby there,
The baby smiles at me.

Dear smiles and of babyhood!
Sin does not subtly wait
To ask aloud my book account,
Or bonds or real estate;
Who smiles sets face against the pane,
And does like she the while,
She reckons with her thumb head,
And accosts back my smile.

She does not scan my glance because
She can not know my name;
Nor query of my social place,
Nor question whence I came;
No fetich-rule of etiquette
Restrains her trotting grace,
Or shuts the winning smile that lights
Her lovely witchcraft face.

She knows me by that nam-less sense,
That wisdom sweet and true,
Which knows love, and knows love alone,
Their oneness divines;
That strange, unerring recognition
Which sees kind angel souls,
Its wisdom all undoubting,
And recognizes their friends;

Which draws the pigeons to my hand,
Fearless and trustful quite,
Which coaks the social sparrows crowd
To my window sill,
The silent sympathy which makes
The lambkins lay I meet
Forget the hungry bunsomeness
To frolic sweet by feet.

Ah, though the world seems full, sometimes,
Of darkness and of dust,
The soul is tender and pitiful
Which feels and hates trust;
Life is not all a stillness
Made up of grief and guile,
While new-creation has such sweet
Smile book to eyes that smile!

HIS LANDLADY'S DAUGHTER.

"Yes, Mr. M'Govern, she is coming home to-morrow."

"No? Really—ah! I mean exactly—yes?"

"Ah, Mr. M'Govern, if you could know how I've toiled and slaved and pinched that girl, she would have an education! I never had no learning myself."

"Precisely—just so."

"And I made up my mind that Annie should be a lady, and she is, sir, she is."

"Certainly—no doubt. Really, the fact is—Would you mind?—I am very busy."

Now the fact was that Mr. M'Govern was determined not to take the slightest interest in the world in his landlady's daughter. And at this moment he was, also, engaged upon a piece of work that not only absorbed all his energies, but apparently presented difficulties that he was not likely to overcome.

The case lay just here. Mr. M'Govern, salesman and commercial traveler for a large dry-goods house, had recently made the acquaintance in an adjacent town, not an large, but fancying itself quite as important, as New York, of a young lady who had suddenly inherited from the exaggerated sentiment we commonly call love. At least he thought so. And now the problem lay, how to awaken a corresponding sensation in his heart of the fair being to whom he felt anxious and desirous to offer the devotion of a lifetime. If he had been rich, he might have overwhelmed her with bouquets such as only be produced by a metropolitan florist. But he was not rich. On the other hand, if he expressed none of it himself, he "had been one of those newspaper chaps, who are always saying things and writing them down, you know, and walk into a girl's heart when they haven't a respectable pair of boots, or a shilling to get their hair cut," even then he might have done something. But, as it was, what could he do?

Finally an idea occurred to him. Brilliant as epigram he was not quite certainly could never hope to be; but somebody had surely once said that "genius is only indomitable perseverance," and there was the lure and the tortoise, and the little busy bee, and there was no knowing but that if he gave a month to it he might yet manage to get up something she would like to read—he could certainly write as good a business letter as any fellow in the office. But then it ought to be in rhyme. And here another difficulty presented itself. Her name was Arabella, and what on earth would rhyme with Arabella? Yet Petrarch had certainly been in the same scrape; there was a word in the language that spoke like Laura. But Petrarch wrote in Italian. Ha! Italian—that was the thing. But the landlady knew Italian, neither did Arabella; and as for attempting to deny that fellows wrote poetry to their girls in English—oh, dear me! no, that was too absurd.

So he set valiantly to work, and on the morning when Mrs. Gibson invaded his sanctum to announce her daughter's expected return, he had got just thus far:

"Most rosa fair, oh! lovely Arabella—

Stop! there was celiac. But how to work it in? And here Mr. M'Govern was met by a difficulty that has oppressed many a greater poet.

His landlady had broken the chain of inspiration; besides, it was nine o'clock, he couldn't do better than go to the office, for there was a fresh consignment of goods that he was expected to dispose of. In the evening he would go onboard call upon Arabella; which he did, and at midnight he returned to his grimy apartment on Mrs. Gibson's third floor, more in love than ever.

But on the following evening, when he came home from the office, he remembered Mrs. Gibson's announcement, and at the table he looked for the young lady in question. Not that he cared what she looked like, but then—

"Hum! not a pretty girl, by any means;" but somehow he looked again. There she sat, a soft little body in a gray alarino dress, with a pair of very pretty hands placidly folded in her lap. What was the impression she gave him? Pat! he didn't know. Now he had it: she seemed so very, very—funny word, wasn't it? well, there was no harm in thinking it clean, that was it. Perhaps it was the awful grime of Mrs. Gibson's front basement did it. Contrast is everything, you know. But ah! she wasn't like the divine, the beautiful——

"Mr. M'Govern, will you have another cup of tea?"

Mr. what a sweet voice!

Now what was it made the old-fourdling-house day by day so much less intolerable than it used to be? Perhaps it was that. Somehow the universal dust had ceased to assert itself as formerly, and became complements by its universal presence. Mr. M'Govern's room by some magic got into its right place. Imminuate things may be totally wrong, but somehow his shower an evidence of reform that argued the existence of saving grace somewhere. Where on earth were the ladies in his social circle? He missed them. Certainly a hole in one's stocking is more honored in the breach than in the observance, but it has a peculiar experience for a clerk, in a boarding-house!

One day Mr. M'Govern happened to remember what his landlady had said to him about her daughter's "education." (Poor woman! he didn't wonder some girls bothered her—every now and then he came across one that puzzled him.) It might be that Annie would be more to talk to. But he must get a safe subject. How would politics do?—here he was tolerably strong himself.

It is a humiliating confession to make regarding one's hero, but no somewhat Clarence M'Govern began to talk politics with Annie. It never had occurred to him that the administration of our Republican Government was the one thing on earth that he knew nothing about. How humiliating it was! The same thing over again. "If you and a rich man or a newspaper chap, what can you do with a girl?" They get their heads packed full of things at school that a fellow who's got his living to make don't know anything about, and if you haven't got any money this world's a beastly hole!" concluded Clarence—in fact his statement he embodied the sentiments of many a wiser man.

But in this case it was too hard. Now with Arabella, rich, beautiful and well-born, it was different; but to be extinguished by Mrs. Gibson's daughter! In utter disgust Mr. M'Govern threw down his pen, which he whistled so lugubriously that one morning, out of pure sympathy, Mrs. Gibson put her head inside the door and whispered consolingly:

"Lor' bless you, yes, she will, Mr. M'Govern; she's only gone for a month."

Then Clarence began to wonder where his thoughts had been straying; and as pen and ink had nothing to do with the matter, he pushed his address to the fair object of his affections, when a small voice appealed to him pathetically.

"Please, thir, thith tin too thick, it won't twittle!"

What is it, my child?" inquired Clarence, affectionately, seeing the small pattitioner on his knee.

"A makin' lamp-lighterth. Thither Bella gave me all dith white paper. I wanted new, but she said it wath good enough for me; there wath nothing on it but some silly verthetth that big fool—she thaid Arabella—had forged—had written to her. Don't please see that. I'll thcream."

Oh, agonies of misplaced affection! There, curling gracefully around a lamp-lighter, destined perhaps to light one of his rival's cigars, were the tender lines.

"Arabella, gaze upon me
While I sit soft and gentle-eyes,
See the strong heart-throb that done me;
All my troubled spirit lies
Panting with its deep emotion,
Like a sea in tropic storm,
And I seem as one who feels Less since he has seen and doth."

"Beautiful! Go on."

Now the result of all this was that within the next three weeks Miss Arabella received no less than nineteen love poems, all signed "Clarence M'Govern" in that gentleman's best style, with a flourish underneath at least four inches long.

But somehow this partnership in poetry did not seem to agree with Annie, and before long she announced her intention of visiting a friend in the country. She "needed a change," she said.

Curiously now, the ladies in Mr. M'Govern's stocking began to reappear, the dust resumed its normal activity and the only line of poetry the young man could remember was:

"Thou wilt come no more, gentle Annie."

Indeed, he became quite sentimental about the matter, and at the breakfast-table he looked for the young lady in question. Not that he cared what she looked like, but then—

"Hum! not a pretty girl, by any means;" but somehow he looked again. There she sat, a soft little body in a gray alarino dress, with a pair of very pretty hands placidly folded in her lap. THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

TUESDAY, MARCH 26, 1878.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, March 22, 1878.

Editor Sentinel:

Nobody pretends to see any public reason for the continuance of the Electoral Commission, and the only question is as to the manner in which it shall be dissolved. The Senate has decided that the Commission is at an end, and that nothing remains to be done but the presentation of the certificates. The standing joint resolution of the two houses, however, is not so very clear and explicit. It provides that the Commission shall continue until the count of votes is completed, and that no question shall be entertained except such as may then be raised in writing by a member of the two houses. It is argued that the Commission is not dissolved by the action of the Senate, but that it will be dissolved when the House takes action. The House has not yet taken action, and it is not probable that it will do so for some days. The Democratic majority in the House is not large enough to override the Republican minority, and the Republicans are determined to prevent a vote. They will do this by refusing to vote, and by refusing to allow a quorum to vote. The Democrats will not be able to get a quorum unless they can induce some Republicans to vote with them. The Republicans will not vote with them unless they can get some concession in return. What that concession will be I cannot say, but I suppose it will be the passage of the Electoral Count bill, with some amendments which will make it more difficult to count in the votes of Democratic States. The Democrats will not vote for the bill

A ROMANCE OUTLIVED.

A few days ago one of the numerous trains upon the New Haven and Hartford Railroad bore from this city, for entombment near an old family homestead some thirty miles up the Sound, the mortal remains of a venerable lady for whose manifold endearing virtues as Christian, wife and friend a bereaved home on a fashionable avenue was left in mourning. Probably but few of the sorrowing escort on that sad occasion were aware that she, whose long matrimonial of uneventful social history was just closed, had once been the heroine of a romance as curious and pathetic as any known to the ingenuities of fiction; for so far as the present narrator can ascertain, she was the last survivor of the several actors therein and could scarcely have found pleasure in any voluntary revival of its memory; yet such was the truth, and the place whither the body was being conveyed for its last rest had been the scene of that romance's strange culmination.

Fifty years since, the place in question, not then stimulated to suburban importance by metropolitan railway connection but a quieter and more pleasant one than that which was the parental home of the principal subject of this sketch. An old family of high social pretensions cherished her there as a daughter doubly beloved, for her striking resemblance to a sister married in the city and fond parents clung ardently to the hope that this remaining child should contract no alliance that withdraws her, also, from their neighborhood. Thus it was that when, during a visit to young lady was making as a family of friends in New York, these parents were informed that a gentleman, with obviously sentimental intentions, was a frequent chairman of her society, they took alarm as though threatened with imminent domestic treason. Forthwith the dismayed mother started post-haste in the family carriage for the point of danger, and, after nearly a whole day's dusty ride, surprised the unsuspecting tair one on the scene of her romantic adventure. The elders of the visited family, which was that of one of the oldest and richest merchants, had thought it their duty to invite the maternal supervision of an association it should properly control, and were not, therefore, amazed at the motherly arrival. As for the daughter, whatever her discomfiture might have been, she frankly confessed at once that Lieut. H., of the English Navy, had, indeed, called upon her frequently and been her escort on promenade occasionally during her city visit; nor did she strive to deprive a strong sentiment in his favor. Then ensued a passage of passionate parental reprehension and filial tears. The lover in the case was at school a stranger to the girl's own household, for his mother had belonged by birth and youthful residence to their very town, though married and settled in England; nor was he in any way socially objectionable, but the fact of his foreign naval profession and consequent presumable obligation to carry his bride to England was a bar to his eligibility as a suitor which our heroine's doting father and mother held to be the most conclusive of disqualifications. Sternly reproving her daughter for having so imprudently encouraged the addresses of a young man whom she must see no more, the elder lady took the remnant damsel into the carriage with her for a prompt return to a stricter future home guardianship, and was horrified when her charge, emboldened by despair as the vehicle drove off, turned suddenly upon her with the exclamation: "Mother, we are married?"

After this startling revelation the astounded matron at once adopted a confession of an act of youthful impetuosity inspired by lovers' fears of parental prohibition, and not in the least suspected by the New York friends. The pair, going out nominally for a walk, had been married at the residence of a friendly clergyman, and then returned to the house and taken leave of each other without betrayal of the secret. Such was the story carried back to the Connecticut homestead by indignant mother and agitated culprit, to excite the latter's father, too, as intensely, and be followed by every argument that parental authority and affection could advance to induce the weeping bride's renunciation of the bridegroom to whom she belonged in name alone. These failing, the good old man of bulk and key was absolved the rebellious daughter became a close prisoner in her own chamber, and in their bewildered distress, father and mother summoned their married daughter from the city for aid and counsel in the family trouble. As may be fancied, the hero of the drama could not long be kept in ignorance of these occurrences, and last no time in presenting himself on the scene and demanding the recognition of his new relationship. He was met by a peremptory refusal to acknowledge the legal right alleged by him, on the ground that she whom he claimed as his wife had perpetrated an act of childish folly, from which the utmost strength of paternal will and judicial equity should be exerted to redeem her and of which she herself had become bitterly penitent. Incredulous of this last intimation, Lieut. H. insisted upon seeing her whose steadfastness was thus impugned and hearing his fate from her own lips; finally, in his chivalrous trust, pledging his honor as a gentleman to resign all claim upon her if, in his presence, she should prefer parents and present home to him-self. His proposition was accepted, of necessity, the next day being named as the time of the interview, upon the supposition that the young lady was too sick from agitation at her hapless predicament to see him at once.

At the appointed hour the Lieutenant waited upon the family, accompanied by a friend as a witness. The resolute mother received him in a room dimmed somewhat by the venetian blinds drawn to keep out the sun, and he had not long to linger before familiar figure flitted in at a door and past him, with handkerchief pressed close to eyes, and sank into a kneeling posture beside the older lady's chair. The heart of the young husband failed him at the sight; but, taking a step forward, he put the one question he had to ask in the steadiest tones he could command: "Elizabeth, will you not go with me?" A moment the lips now hidden against the maternal bosom were silent, and then came the answer, tremulous and chilling: "I desire to remain with my mother!" Shocked inexpressibly, Lieut. H. paused only long enough to assure himself that the hidden face had not even a pitying glance for him, and then, with a resigned bow, quitted room and mansion without another word. However much he may have regretted his rashness in staking so much upon such a trial, it was plain that he recognized no hope of appeal. Believing that she who was his only by a brief ceremony of the church did indeed repent her sharp theirs and wished its undoing, he doubted not that her letter of response to his simple and earnest appeal meant complete renunciation of him. Yet scarcely had he withdrawn with his witness from the fatal but momentous scene of rejection, when the latter uplifted from its concealment on a mother's bosom she revealed as unstrangely like that of the virgin wife, though not hers. While she, still a heroine, was a frequent chairman of her society, they took alarm as though threatened with imminent domestic treason. Forthwith the dismayed mother started post-haste in the family carriage for the point of danger, and, after nearly a whole day's dusty ride, surprised the unsuspecting tair one on the scene of her romantic adventure. The Famine in China.

Late mails received in San Francisco bring heartrending reports of the famine in China. Husbands are selling their wives and parents their children to obtain food for all. Three or four millions of people are dependent upon the Government for support. At least 10,000,000 are in extreme destitution. The famine districts in which famine is felt, in a greater or less degree, are Shensi, Shansi, Chihli and Honan. They have an aggregate population of 75,000,000. Since the average of wealth among them is very low, it is probable that the additions to the number of the sufferers will be rapid and large. No relief from the crops can be looked for before May or June. Meanwhile, there are only three sources of relief open to the starving people, and none of these seem to be either sufficient or certain. First, there is the Chinese Government, which, with the best intentions to cure for its subjects, is unable to deal with an emergency of this description. The resources of the British Government, which are many times larger than those of the Chinese, are taxed to their utmost to meet the demands of the Indian famine; and the latter was much smaller, both in the extent of territory covered and the number of sufferers, than the one which now prevails in China. Moreover the Chinese Government labors under the difficulty of having to make its distributions through corrupt and inefficient servants. The dispatches in yesterday's papers state that the exertions of the Government are to a great extent nullified by the dishonesty of officials. This dishonesty has been so flagrant in many instances that outbreaks have occurred, and at Houching a Mandarin was beheaded for speculating on the necessities of the people. Another source of relief, suggested by the philanthropists of the United States, is the return of the Chinese Indemnity Fund, now unappropriated in the Treasury, for use in the relief of the sufferers. The objections to this benevolent era, first, that it cannot receive the sanction of Congress until too late; and, secondly, that the United States have not the right to specify how the money shall be used when it is returned. If the money was unjustly extorted from China, it ought to be returned without conditions, if it was not extorted, it ought not to be returned at all. There is no room for casuistry in the discussion of so simple a question as this. The third source of relief is voluntary contributions from the country of the civilized world. This is time that is 1845.

An Old Bull-Fighter.

Cossio, commonly called Salamanchino, is a veteran matador, seventy years of age, who, having figured in Queen Isabella's marriage festivities, wished, although he had long retired from the field, to appear in Friday's and Saturday's bull-fights. He appeared dressed in blue, embroidered with silver; his gray hair was gathered into a knot behind, and over his pate a white shirt waved a long red ovaral. On the fourth bull being let loose he advanced toward the Royal box to request permission to encounter it. All the toreros clustered round him to protest him. The bull is attracted toward Salamanchino, who holds his scarlet mantle in one hand and his sword in the other. The struggle commences, but Cossa is old, he is not firm on his legs, his muscles are not supple, his aim is not sure. Twice the bull throws him down. He is thought to be dead, but he is up again and returns to the fight. There is a cry of "Fuera!" and well-known bull-fighters are waved to stop him; but the obstinate matador wishes to win a last laurel. Fortune, however, is unpropitious, seven times he attacks the bull, seven times he misses it. According to custom, after seven unsuccessful attacks, the bull's life is safe, and, shaking its generous, may re-enter the "Toril" amid the applause of the spectators; while on the other hand, its unfortunate combatant is hissed.—Madrid Cor. London Times.

The total value of imports into France in 1877 was 3,756,368,000 francs, or $751,274,000; and exports, 3,381,323,000 francs, or $676,565,000. The total value of the foreign commerce was, therefore, $1,418,000,000. The falling off in imports as compared with 1876 was 232,000,000 francs, and of exports the decrease was 93,000,000 francs.

The coal production of the world has increased enormously since 1845. In that year Great Britain produced 31,500,000 tons; in 1874, 125,043,000. Belgium, 1845, 4,900,077; in 1874, 14,669,000. France, 1845, 4,141,617; 1874, 16,349,000. Prussia, 1845, 5,500,000; 1874, 41,754,000. In the United States the production in 1874 was nearly ten times that in 1845.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Never keep your cattle short; few farmers can afford it. If you starve them they will starve you. Prairie Farmer.

—The simplest thing on the farm needs study. Not one man in ten who claims to be a farmer, knows how to feed a horse, pig, cow or sheep.

—Nothing but ultimate and deserved ruin stares that farmer in the face who does not pay personal attention to the most minute details of histarm.—State Register.

—When labor is scarce it will be dear when it is abundant it will be cheap. It is the inevitable law. Legislatures cannot help or hinder.—Iowa State Register.

—Sore Sauce.—Half a cupful of butter and stir in a tablespoonful of flour and one pint boiling water, nearly one cupful sugar, two spoonfuls good vinegar; spice to taste.

—Dark Steamed Pudding.—To be steamed two and a half or three hours one cupful molasses, one cupful sweet milk, two cupfuls butter, four cupfuls flour, one teaspoonful soda, three quarters cupful fruit; spice to suit the taste; to be eaten with sour sauce.

—Raised Dough Cake.—Two cups of dough, one of sugar, one of sweet cream, one-half cup of butter, the same of washed and strained currants, two eggs, half a teaspoonful of soda, spice to taste. Mix well together and set in a warm place to rise. When light bake in a moderate oven.

—Vinegar Pie.—One cup of vinegar (of very sharp flavor one-third water), one tablespoon of flour, one cup sugar, one egg, a piece of butter the size of an egg. Boil the vinegar; wet the flour with a little cold water and stir it in; when the vinegar boils up pour it on the sugar and butter; after it cools add the egg, and bake with under and upper crust.

—In reply to your questions regarding the cactus, I would say that I never change the earth about the roots of the plant, but I occasionally remove the surface earth to the depth of a couple of inches or so and replace it with well-rotted leaf mold. I have two specimens of this plant that are about five feet high, some of the leaves being nearly twenty inches in length.—Cor. Free Press.

—Coconut Cake.—Two cups of sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, three and one-half of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, six eggs, leaving four of the whites out for filling. Bake in jelly cake pans. The day before baking grate one good-sized coconut or two small ones. Beat the four whites of eggs to a stiff froth; add to each egg add ten teaspoonfuls of powdered sugar; spread on each layer, then sprinkle your coconut and sprinkle it on top of icing.

—Floating Island.—Put a pint of milk in a small tin pail, set it in a kettle of boiling water and let it scald; take the whites of three eggs, beat to a stiff froth, then drop a spoonful at a time into the milk and let them cook about five minutes; then skim them out on a platter; when the milk is cold enough to eat, add the yolks, add one egg, sugar, nutmeg, lemon and a very little salt; beat and turn into the pan; let it cook until it is as thick as cream; then turn into the dish with the islands, which will rise to the top.

—A Tennessee correspondent says: I want to give you my plan for raising geraniums from the seed. First, to prepare the soil, take one-third of garden mold, one-third rotten cow dung, one-third sand. Then dampen the dirt slightly before sowing the seed and cover to the thickness of a quarter of an inch. Of course you know they will not bloom till the second year. Mine bloomed beautifully the second year, and I gathered seed from them. Have tried this plan for four years and know it to be good.

Early Vegetables.

No farmer's garden should be without a liberal supply of good vegetables. Almost every farmer raises a few; but they are too often started late and left to grow without proper attention. The idea is to have the plants—especially for the early cabbage and tomato—well grown before the season out of doors for Nature, for before we are situated that it is inconvenient to obtain a supply of plants from a nursery, one must grow the plant for themselves, with very little extra trouble. A good plan is to have a hot bed, and no fun over but that, with a little patience, an old window-sash and a few common boards, can make one. From the middle to the last of February is the time to start. The boards are to be nailed together in the form of a box, from ten to twelve inches deep, the right size for the sash, and with the back some six or eight inches higher than the front. Dig a shallow pit, a little smaller than the frame and about a foot deep, setting the frame over it. Fill in with from twelve to fifteen inches of horse-manure, free from long straw, and top off with two or three inches of garden-soil, made fine. Sow the seed for cabbage and tomatoes in rows from six to eight inches apart, and over the whole put the sash. When the plants are an inch or two out of ground, thin out, leaving some two inches between each plant. The bed should be kept moist by frequent sprinklings of tepid water. When the plants have obtained a vigorous growth, it is better to thin again, taking out every other plant. After the first thinning the plants should have air daily for an hour or two at mid-day, by raising the sash a little from one side of the frame. By the time the plants grow high enough to reach the glass there will probably be no danger from frost and the sash may be raised up higher and left so, or entirely removed from the frame. As soon as the open ground is in condition the plants should be set out, not less than six feet apart each way, for the tomatoes. Water the plants freely at the time of transplanting, then mulch with dry earth, and they will grow without further watering.

By the use of a hot-bed lettuce and radishes can be had weeks earlier than when grown in the open air; and cucumbers may be started and afterward transplanted equally as well as tomatoes or cabbage.

Tomato plants may also be started in a box kept in a room where there is a steady fire, giving the plants all the sun possible during the day. Rich earth is all that is needed for this purpose. It is better to keep the box covered with glass, to prevent the evaporation of moisture; and the plants should be sprinkled with tepid water nearly every day. It is a good plan to transplant tomatoes that have been started in boxes as soon as the plants have the third leaf. Old fruit-cans, filled with mold, may be used for this purpose. The bottom should be punched full of holes or taken out entirely. The transplanting should then be continued by changing plants one can to another, as this has been found an advantage to the plants. As soon as possible give the plants one-third air by raising a window or putting them out of doors in the middle of the day; and finally transplant to open ground the same as if started in a hot-bed.

For starting melons and cucumbers in-doors the best pots are small pieces of sod, turned grass-side down and placed upon a board. When the season is warm enough set out sods and all in the garden, having rich, loamy soil, and spread up the leaves of the plants.—N. Y. Independent.

Poultry Keeping by Boys.

It is one of the most promising indications of character when boys show a disposition to earn something. This desire to build something in leo simple is the very opposite of trampism. Among the employment of owning, buying and selling is very keen, and is often gratified in the getting of knives, old watches and trinkets, and making exchanges with each other. Who does not remember the wonderful dicker and trade of his boyhood?

It was only the beginning of a development, or, rather, a self-education. This matter should not be permitted to go without some guidance. Parents and guardians should take an interest in it: not exercising a meddling interference, but inspiring confidence, so as to be able to cooperate, plan and watch the result.

Now comes a scheme that is just right. How can we teach a boy business habits better than by giving him an opportunity to "run" a business? The account must be accurately kept; there must be buying and selling; there must be bartering; there ought to be profit! A miniature business springs up. Inasmuch as it is real, why is it not as good as a business college? It may be better; for it may prevent spending time in the streets or away from home, perhaps among questionable companions. A love of home is fostered by the ownership of flowers, small fruits and poultry. A fondness for the finer things produced by our climate—to cultivate them, if belonging to the animal—is not only a source of keen enjoyment, but indicates good traits and a certain elevation of character above that which is brutish. Young people should be deftly guided, step by step, through pleasant paths, with here and there a little job of earnest work, made easy by social frolic and recreation, which come after in their proper place. With a little encouragement, boys may become quite familiar with the points of excellence in high-class poultry, pigeons and other pets and learn the best methods of breeding and management.

They may learn when and where to purchase supplies to the best advantage, and how to sell the surplus products, so as to give the most profit with the least expense. A pleasant acquaintance and good business habits may be formed with the right kind of a boy for Nature, for before we are situated that it is inconvenient to obtain a supply of plants from a nursery, one must grow the plant for themselves, with very little extra trouble. A good plan is to have a hot bed, and no fun over but that, with a little patience, an old window-sash and a few common boards, can make one. From the middle to the last of February is the time to start. The boards are to be nailed together in the form of a box, from ten to twelve inches deep, the right size for the sash, and with the back some six or eight inches higher than the front. Dig a shallow pit, a little smaller than the frame and about a foot deep, setting the frame over it. Fill in with from twelve to fifteen inches of horse-manure, free from long straw, and top off with two or three inches of garden-soil, made fine. Sow the seed for cabbage and tomatoes in rows from six to eight inches apart, and over the whole put the sash. When the plants are an inch or two out of ground, thin out, leaving some two inches between each plant. The bed should be kept moist by frequent sprinklings of tepid water. When the plants have obtained a vigorous growth, it is better to thin again, taking out every other plant. After the first thinning the plants should have air daily for an hour or two at mid-day, by raising the sash a little from one side of the frame. By the time the plants grow high enough to reach the glass there will probably be no danger from

FOR DROPSY.

CENTRAL FALLS, R. I., Oct. 19, 1877.

Mr. H. R. STEVENS:

It is a pleasure to give my testimony for your valuable medicine. I was sick for a long time with dropsy, under the doctor's care. He said I was WATER between the HEART and LUNGS. I had to have my pocket emptied every week. I took the VEGETINE, but it seemed to help me. VEGETINE is the medicine for dropsy. I began to feel better after taking a few bottles. I have taken thirty bottles in all. I am entirely well—never felt better. No one can feel more grateful than I do.

Yours, dear sir, gratefully,
A. H. WHEELER.

VEGETINE. When the blood becomes thicken and sluggish, either from change of weather or of climate, want of exercise, irregular diet, or from any other cause, the VEGETINE will renew the blood, carry off the impurities, restore the stomach, regulate the bowels, and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body.

VEGETINE

For Kidney Complaint and Nervous Debility.

RICHMOND, ME., Dec. 28, 1877.

Mr. STEVENS:

Dear Sir: I had been troubled with kidney disease, which I commenced taking the VEGETINE. I was very low, my appetite was forfeited to disease, and the KIDNEY COMPLAINT had won very serious control over me. I felt as if I was going down to the grave. I found I was being benefited by the use of VEGETINE. I have used it continuously for about six months, and I am happy to say everything is in a healthy condition. I know of no remedy that is recommended to be such a blood purifier as VEGETINE. I know it is everything it is recommended to be.

Yours truly,
MRS. A. J. SPEAR.

VEGETINE is nourishing and strengthening; purifies the blood; regulates the bowels; quiets the nervous system; gives refreshing rest to the weary, and restores the whole system to action.

VEGETINE

For Sick Headache.

EVANSVILLE, IND., Jan. 1, 1878.

Mr. STEVENS:

Dear Sir: I have used your VEGETINE for Sick HEADACHE, and have greatly benefited thereby. I have every reason to believe it to be a good medicine.

Yours, very respectfully,
MRS. JAMES CONNER, 421 Third Street.

HEADACHE. VEGETINE can be said to be a sure remedy for the many kinds of Headache, as it acts directly upon the various causes of this complaint—Nervousness, Indigestion, Costiveness, Sick Stomach, Biliousness, etc. Try the VEGETINE. You will never regret it.

VEGETINE.

Doctor's Report.

DR. CHARLES M. HUDDENHAKER, Apothecary, Evansville, Ind.

The VEGETINE writes:

I have a large number of good customers who take VEGETINE. They all speak well of it. I have it for a good medicine for the complaints for which it is recommended.

Dec. 27, 1877.

VEGETINE is a great panacea for our aged fathers and mothers, for it gives them strength, quiets their nerves, and gives them balmy sleep.

VEGETINE.

Doctor's Report.

H. R. STEVENS, ESQ.:

Dear Sir:—We have been selling your valuable VEGETINE for three years, and we find that it gives perfect satisfaction. We believe it to be the best blood purifier before the public.

Yours truly,
HENRY H. HILTON & CO.

VEGETINE has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

A ROMANCE OUTLIVED.

A few days ago one of the numerous trains upon the New Haven and Hartford Railroad bore from this city, for custombouse, over an old family homestead some thirty miles up the Sound, the mortal remains of a venerable lady for whose manifold endearing virtues as Christian, wife and friend all have received home on a fashionable avenue was left in mourning. Probably but few of the sorrowing escort on that sad occasion were aware that she, whose long matronhood of uneventful social history was just closed, had once been the heroine of a romance as curious and pathetic as any known to the ingenuities of fiction; for, so far as the present narrator can ascertain, she was the last survivor of the several actors therein and could scarcely have found pleasure in any voluntary revival of its memory; yet such was the truth, and the place whither the body was being conveyed for its last rest had been the scene of that romance's strange culmination.

Fifty years since, the place in question, and then stimulated to suburban importance by metropolitan railway connection, had among the better mansions on its outskirts no handsomer one than that which was the parental home of the principal subject of this sketch. An old family of high social pretensions cherished her there as a daughter-child, beloved for her stirling resemblance to a sister married in the city, and fondly contributed accordently to the hope that this remaining child should contract no new ties to withdraw her, also, from their neighborhood. It was then that, during a visit the young lady was making to a family of friends in New York, these parents were informed that a gentleman, with obviously sentimental intentions, was a frequent claimant of her society, they took alarm as though threatened with imminent domestic treason. Forthwith the dismayed mother started post-haste in the family carriage for the point of danger and, after nearly a whole day's dusty ride, surprised the unsuspecting fair one on the scene of her romantic adventure. The elders of the visited family, which was that of one of our oldest and best merchants, had thought it their duty to invite the maternal supervision of an association it should properly control, and were no, therefore, amazed at the motherly accessory.

As for the daughter, whatever her dissontinure might have been, she frankly confessed that the object of her choice was just enough foreign to the matrimonial market can ascertain, she was the last survivor of the several actors therein and could scarcely have found pleasure in any voluntary revival of its memory; yet such was the truth, and the place whither the body was being conveyed for its last rest had been the scene of that romance's strange culmination.

Boyne Excelsior Entertainment.—An old Patriotic Southron left us text for the Prophet one asked His Spirit of Power "Who art greater than Thou?" and the Spirit answered, "Cunning!" There are evidently those in this day who so dimly believe in this saying as the good Moslem does in the Koran, or the Christian in his Bible. When a square fight with visible weapons won't win a battle, Greek fire and poisoned wells answer the same purpose. Who cares for honor? We have nothing but respect for those citizens who, at the Republican caucus, voted for Mr Nettleton through honest convictions; but we are of the opinion that the action of those so-called Republicans who voted for him to weaken the Republican ticket and strengthen the cause of a Democrat, is of questionable respectability. This was the avowed purpose of a squad of citizens at the caucus. It was neither a compliment to Mr. Nettleton, themselves or their Democratic master. But the cunning scheme failed, and one person has been indignantly snubbed, and another contemptuously kicked, by public sentiment

The Township Elections.

The Township elections passed off on Monday evening and a very small vote was polled. The following tickets were nominated Republican—E. H. Green, Clerk; Clinton Bell, Treasurer—A. Barnes, Highway Com.; W. C. Newman, Supervisor—J. Lamprey; Justices—Nelson Smith, Thomas Bartholomew.

The contest for supervisor was between Mr. Green and Mr. Nettleton, the present incumbent. Mr. Nettleton was not only the candidate of a portion of his own party, but a number of Democrats who thought it a shame to sacrifice him upon the altar of their personal preference for a Democrat. Their votes were an insult to Mr. Nettleton, and should be a reproach to themselves and the gentleman whom they served.

The dissatisfied element lobbied the result, and a call was issued for a people's caucus, signed by Joseph M. Clark, who met according to call on Thursday evening. The result of this caucus was the publication of substantially the same ticket that the previous nations had put in the field. J. M. Clark was chairman, and the office of Secretary was filled by a young and verdant boy, whose name we have forgotten. At any rate the boy aforesaid got sent and quit immediately after the nomination of Mr. Green, and the men all laughed at the superlative puerility of boy's conduct. In this manner Mr. Green's majority over Mr. Nettleton exceeded that of the previous caucus.

Even this result failed to satisfy the tenacious minority, and a private caucus was held, at which a new ticket was put in the field, with Mr. Nettleton for Supervisor.

Election morning gave birth to a "Union" ticket, with J. Milo Eaton for Supervisor, and the fight began.

THE RESULT.

Green, Rep., 44
Eaton, Dem., 34.
Nettleton, Ind., 16.

The entire Republican ticket was elected excepting Wood, Superintendent of Schools. R. J. Seaman, who was upon both the opposition tickets, was elected to that office by two majority.

Personally we have always considered Mr. Nettleton a honest man and a gentleman, but we question the wisdom or propriety of his action, after having personally participated in one caucus, and his friends and relatives in another. On both occasions public sentiment manifested itself in unmistakeable terms as demanding a change in the office of Supervisor.

NORTHPORT.

Wood was elected in Kasswood by five majority over Meech. W. E. Brown was elected Clerk, Olney Treasurer, and Hilton Highway Commissioner

MARION.

John Ward was elected Supervisor, W. D. Thompson Clerk, and Thomas Smith Treasurer in Marion

HAYES.

Supervisor, Mordecai; Clerk, Burgess; Treasurer, Cooper; Highway Commissioner, Alex. Marentis.

EVANGELINE.

Supervisor, Hicks; Clerk, Abrams; Treasurer, Bunter; Highway Commissioner, Geak.

HAYES.—A movement is on foot in Hayes to defeat the result at the election in that Township. It is alleged that last spring at the Township meeting it was voted to hold the next Township meeting at the Whitford school house. This spring the voters met at the Ross school house. The thing looks mixed.

For 18 years we have manufactured Saleratus with great success. For the past two years we have been manufacturing by a new process. It never becomes rank and is always uniform in strength. It is made from the best English stock, is perfectly pure and is stronger than any other saleratus in market. CONGRESS.

IN the Senate, on the 12th, the bill in aid of the James ti. Bennett Polar Expedition was passed unanimously. A petition was presented, signed by E. G. Ingersoll, of Illinois, and others, declaring that the statutes passed ostensibly for the suppression of obscene literature are plain violations of the letter and spirit of the fundamental principles of our Government, and that they are capable of, and are in fact, being used for the purpose of moral and religious persecution, and the petitioners pray that such statutes may be repealed or materially modified so that they cannot be used, as alleged, to abridge freedom of the press and of speech. The House bill for the relief of William A. Hammond, late Surgeon-General, was passed 30 to 1. In the House, the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was debated at considerable length in Committee of the Whole.

BILLS were introduced and referred, in the Senate, on the 13th: to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon; to promote the dispersal of surplus and the refunding of the National debt; to authorize the First National Bank of Washington, with amendments; House bill to make perpetual charged with crimes and offenses committed witnesses in United States and Territorial Courts.

The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole, in the House; seven amendments were agreed to, and the bill and amendments were reported to the House and passed. The Senate bill to aid the Bennett Polar Expedition was also passed.

A NUMBER of Pension bills were passed in the Senate, on the 14th. Bills were introduced providing for the appointment of two commissions, and all other debts due to the United States, in legal-tender notes at par, except where it is otherwise expressed stipulated on the face of the obligation or contract; to regulate railroad fares and freight tariffs on the Denver Pacific and Kansas Pacific Railways; to authorize the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Bismarck to the Black Hills. Adjourned to the 18th. A bill was introduced in the House, regulating the reserve fund of National Banks. The bill extending to three years the time for the withdrawing of limited bonds from bond was debated and amended in Committee of the Whole, reported to the House and passed—125 to 16.

THE Senate was not in session on the 15th. In the House, a substitute was reported and referred to the Committee of the Whole for the bill to promote the disposal of surplus in the Treasury and the refunding of the National debt. The contested-election case of Dean vs. Field, from the Third Massachusetts District, was considered, the majority report favoring the claim of the former, and the minority report those of the latter—the sitting member. After some discussion, the Speaker had read a telegram announcing the death, in Havana, of yellow fever of the Hon. John F. Leonard, Congressman from the Fifth Louisiana District, and a resolution, out of respect to the memory of the deceased, the House adjourned.

THE Senate was not in session on the 16th. A bill was introduced and referred to the House for the establishment of a mint at Indianapolis. The bill making available for the payment of certain Southern ante-bellum mail contractors the sum of $76,00 already appropriated, was further considered in Committee of the Whole, and after having been amended so that such mail contractors had been paid, or payment had been provided for by the Confederate States Government, and Postmaster-General, a motion was agreed to to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, and this action of the committee was concurred in by the House without division.

BILLS were passed in the Senate, on the 16th—House bill appropriating $275,00 for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. Senate bill to prohibit Senators of Congress from becoming sureties on certain bonds. Among the bills introduced were one making appropriations for defending trespassing on public lands, for bringing into market public lands in certain States and for other purposes. An adverse report was made from the Judiciary Committee on the bill providing that any women who shall have been a member of the bar of the highest court of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia for a period of three years, may be admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States, on the ground of the adverse report being that there was no balance in the power of law in the admission of women to practice in the United States Courts; the courts making their own rules governing the admission of attorneys, and the proposed act would discriminate in favor of women, by compelling the court to admit them when it was in its power to admit men. The House introduced the House-granting pensions to soldiers who have lost the use of fingers; but the amendment was non-commissioned officers, providing that no claim shall be paid which have not already been paid by the Confederate Government; establishing a mint in Louisville, Ky.; repealing the law appropriating $250,000 for the payment of certain claims of the citizens of the State of Ohio growing out of the raids; public lands remaining in the State; granting adjacent sections of land to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of the ship-canal; limiting the appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River on what leaves a margin of commission to accretion can be arranged; for the erection of a monument over the grave of Thaddeus Kosciusko.

DOMESTIC.

THE Prohibitory Liquor bill was defeated in the Massachusetts House of Representatives, on the 12th, the vote being 118 against to ninety-three for.

THE Acton (Mass.) powder-mill blew up on the 12th, killing two men. The noise of the explosion was plainly heard at a distance of fifteen miles. A large mill south of the works was literally covered with fragments of the building.

ON the evening of the 14th, at Harrisburg, Pa., two children named Wood were fatally, and two others seriously, burned by the explosion of coal-oil, with which the eldest, aged eleven, was lighting the fire.

HAZING was revived at Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. H., on the night of the 18th. Early in the evening the Sophomores intruded upon the Freshmen. About two o'clock the next morning, the Freshmen broke into a room occupied by a Sophomore and his brother—a Senior—and both the latter were unmercifully beaten with bottles and disfigured. Two of the assailants were arrested for assault with intent to kill.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 13th stated that the first three silver dollars of the new coinage had been received there, one of them being delivered to the President, one to the Secretary of the Treasury and the other to the Director of the Mint. Ten thousand of the new dollars would be received from the Philadelphia Mint on the 14th.

A RECENTLY-DISCHARGED employe of the Interior Department in Washington (Dr. B. S. Schoen) shot himself on the night of the 13th.

THE exchanging of new silver dollars for gold commenced at the Philadelphia Mint, on the 13th. Coinage would continue at the rate of $40,000 a day.

THE Secretary of the Interior has decided that pre-emption filing is not absolutely required in making a homestead entry, and that it may be entirely dispensed with in making final proof thereon. This ruling will, it is said, save settlers a great deal of inconvenience and expense.

JOSEPH LAPAIGE, alias Joseph Parish, was hanged at Concord, N. H., on the 18th, for the murder, in October, 1875, of Josie Langmaid, while on her way to school. He confessed to the crime for which he was hanged, and also to the murder of Miss Hall, a school teacher, at St. Albans, Vt., in 1874.

GUS JOHNSON, a white man, was hanged at Rome, Ga., on the 15th, for the murder, in 1876, of a colored man named Alfred McGhee. Johnson confessed to four murders, the one for which he suffered death being very atrocious and entirely without provocation. He was defiant to the last.

DURING the week ending on the 16th, the Secretary of the Treasury purchased silver bullion sufficient to run the mints about five weeks. The price paid was not as great as expected by bullion holders.

IN regard to the statements recently published, that the Treasury Department would purchase $100,000,000 4½-per-cent. bonds upon the market, the Secretary of the Treasury announces that, in response to applications, he had asked their terms for placing such bonds to be admitted for his consideration. The offers received, up to the 18th, had not been satisfactory, and the Secretary stated that only 4-per-cent bonds would be sold, unless 4½-per-cents could be disposed of at their relative value with 4-per-cents, the latter being placed at par. He would, at any time, receive bids for 4½-per-cent. bonds on that basis.

THE Lochmere National Bank, of East Cambridge, Mass., was robbed, on the 16th, of about $50,000 in Government bonds and other securities. The robbery was effected by the President of the institution being called to the door to see a lady who wished to transact some business. The officer immediately returned to the inside office, but he subsequently discovered that, during his brief absence, the vaults had been robbed of trunks containing the amount specified.

AN eleven-year-old boy, named John Foley, died of hydrophobia at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., a few nights ago. He was bitten by a dog about six weeks before his death.

THE heaviest snow-storm experienced since the settlement of the Black Hills by white men occurred in that section recently, extending over a period of five days. The snow was over four feet deep on a level at Deadwood, on the 12th, and mail and telegraphic communication with the States was interrupted.

FOUR tramps were burned in a car on the Iron Mountain Railroad, at Piedmont, Mo., on the 13th. They were stealing a ride in a cotton car.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

A CONCORD (N. H.) telegram of the 13th says the election in that State had resulted in the choice of Prescott (Rep.) for Governor, by a majority of between 1,000 and 2,000. The Republicans had also carried the House. Senate: and Council

ROBERT HAMILTON, ex-Member of Congress from New Jersey, died on the morning of the 16th, of paralysis.

THOMAS LEHNARD, who was lately reported to have been sent to Cuba to investigate certain alleged cases of kidnaping, died at Havana, a few days ago, of yellow-fever.

OLIVER A. WILLARD, editor-in-chief of the Chicago Evening Post, died a few days ago, aged forty-three years.

ON the 18th, the Louisiana State Supreme Court rendered its decision in the application for writs of ten. Anderson, of the State Returning Board. It reverses the opinion of the Court below, which found him guilty of contempt and perjury, and ordered his immediate release from custody.

ON the 17th, at Kalamazoo, Mich., Dr. E. H. Van Deusen, late Superintendent of the Michigan State Insane Asylum, was mulcted in the sum of $6,000 damages for malpractice and false imprisonment, Mrs. Nancy Newcomer, of Chicago, being the complainant.

FOREIGN.

ACCORDING to a Vienna special of the 13th, the Roumanian representative had handed a note to Count Andrassy stating that Roumania would not be bound by the Turco-Russian peace preliminaries.

THE Armenians have asked Great Britain to obtain, from the forthcoming Congress, autonomy for Turkish Armenia, with an European guaranty for protection.

THE Sultan has bestowed upon the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, of London, the Grand Cordon of the Order of Medjidie as a recognition of her efforts in behalf of Turkish refugees.

CORFU specials of the 13th say the Turks had defeated eight Christian villages in the District of Delvino, and massacred the male inhabitants. They had also killed 100 fugitive women and children

THE Thessalian insurgents claim the recent defeat of the Turks near Pharsala, killing or wounding 400.

A RUDE stone-room, with bell, was being erected at Woolwich, Eng., fell on the 13th, burying hundreds of workmen in the ruins. A large number were seriously, and some fatally, injured.

ACCORDING to London dispatches of the 14th, apprehension prevailed that the relations between Russia and England were becoming unsatisfactory and embarrassing. It was reported that England had concluded to occupy Mitylene, which Russia had declared it would consider casus belli, and that the latter had moved its forces nearer to Constantinople. The situation was considered full of menace.

ON the 14th, thirty-six persons were drowned at Brest, France, by the upsetting of a barge.

ACCORDING to an Athens dispatch of the 15th, Russia had rejected the proposal to submit Greece to the Conference.

IT is semi-officially announced from St. Petersburg that Prince Battenburg, the Czarina's nephew, has been definitely proposed for the throne of Bulgaria.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 15th says North Syria had revolted and separated itself from the Sultan. The Kurds in Diarbekir had also revolted.

A PERA dispatch of the 15th says Russian transports were landing large quantities of supplies at Bourgas, on the Black Sea, and taking away all sick and wounded, but no able-bodied soldiers. The exhibition was extending that the war was not yet ended.

ACCORDING to London dispatches of the 15th, the hostility toward Russia was visibly increasing, and hopes of peace were based wholly upon the expectation that Russia would abate her pretensions when the Conference met and yield to the representations of England. It was believed, however, that Austria and Germany would support Russia, and that, if England would fight, she would have no other ally than Turkey who is about to break her late treaty with Russia the moment she discovered a disposition for war on the part of England.

THE news was received from St. Petersburg, on the evening of the 17th, that the treaty with Turkey had, that day, been formally ratified by the Russian Government.

ACCORDING to Constantinople dispatches of the 17th, strong detachments of Russian troops were patrolling the streets of that city, day and night, on account of the prevailing excitement over the posting of seditious placards.

A PESTH (Hungary) dispatch of the 17th says Prince Bismarck had finally indicated Russia to submit the entire provisions of the treaty to the Congress.

OVER 6,000 persons have lately been attacked with measles at Lyons, France.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople dispatch of the 18th, in the event of war between Russia and England, Turkey would be entirely neutral.

ON the evening of the 18th, O'Donavan Rossa, the Fenian, lectured at Toronto, Can. During the delivery of the lecture an Orange mob attacked and gutted the building, and, subsequently, the hotel where he was stopping, leaving only the bare walls standing. Four persons were shot.

"Honest-Money League" Platform.

To the People of the United States:

Pursuant to a call, a meeting of citizens of the Northwest in favor of an honest-money standard was held in the City of Chicago to-day (March 14), and the following declaration was unanimously adopted as a platform of principles:

1. The interests of the country, and, consequently, the welfare and happiness of its people, require stability in the standard of value and uniformity in the circulating medium of exchange.

2. The experience of all civilized and commercial Nations proves that gold and silver possess stability of value in a greater degree than any other commodities, and are, therefore, the best standard of value, and, in connection with such representatives of convertible value as the mound, the only safe and uniform circulating medium.

3. It is the duty of the Government to establish and maintain a sound and uniform currency system, the establishment and maintenance of such a system are one of the chief purposes had in the founders of our Government, in framing the Constitution, and a power to be advanced by such a system requires only a firm adherence to the principles and spirit of the Constitution.

4. The Constitution contemplates only the money of the precious metals as a standard of value. These principles were strictly observed by the Government for a great National emergency compelled a temporary departure from them. That departure was solemnly and repeatedly declared to be only temporary, and only justifiable on the ground of the extreme necessity in a time of National peril, and the most positive assurances have been given by the Legislative and Executive departments of Government that when the exigency of the war should pass away the Government would, as soon as practicable, return to the Constitutional standard, the advantages of and measure of value.

5. The experience that made it necessary for the Government to force upon the people an irredeemable paper currency, and subsequently to once perpetuate that system as a permanent financial policy would be a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, and of the spirit of the laws and pledges under which gold was surrendered and issued; and as the experience of the world has proved, would necessarily be followed by still further depression, to the great injury of all legitimate business, and to the suffering of the laboring classes, upon whom the evils of the depreciated currency would fall most heavily and severely.

6. We have now an abundance of money to supply all the wants of trade; our paper currency is rapidly approaching the uniformity and quality of the coin standards, and, if left free from further legislative changes, it will soon, by force of natural laws, go into general circulation, and general confidence and satisfaction will be restored to the country.

7. We invite all our fellow-citizens who concur in these views of the nature of money and methods of exchange, and in the duty of the Government in relation thereto, to unite with us in an effort to maintain the honor and welfare of our common country, and in a protest against the adoption of any irredeemable paper money policy, which would certainly sooner or later be followed by all the fluctuation and depreciation, ending only in ultimate repudiation and general financial ruin.

—The tipping over of a car-load of hot cinders into a snow-bank at the Pine Iron Works in Montgomery County, Pa., recently, resulted in a fearful explosion, the shock of which is said to have shaken houses 100 yards away, and persons standing near by were severely burned and cut by the flying cinders.

DURING the year 1877 42,000 paupers in Indiana were cared for at the expense of the various counties in the State at a cost of $600,626.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

THERE was only a total of 25,000 tons of ice in Detroit on the 19th.

JOSEPH COSPER, a clerk, in the employ of Prentiss & Wiley, of Detroit, was arrested on the 15th, for stealing $400 worth of goods from his employers.

THE locomotive and four cars of the way-freight, going south, on the morning of the 11th, were ditched, near St. Charles, by the washing out of the track. Charles Thayer, the fireman, was killed, and Silas Hall, the engineer, fatally scalded.

MARTIN LAWING, employed in a saw-mill at Six Lakes, was instantly killed by the bursting of a pulley-wheel, on the 14th.

HENRY MASTENBROOK, a farmer in Vergennes Township, was lately defeated in a lawsuit, and, crazed with anger, took a shot-gun, on the 9th, to find Beckwith, the man who sued him. Not finding him, he placed the muzzle of the gun against his own head, and blew his brains out.

HON. GEORGE M. BUCK, of Kalamazoo, is the delegate chosen to represent Michigan at the International Sabbath-School Convention, which meets at Atlanta, Ga., April 17.

THE carpenter for the out of wild pigeons to this State, and the people up in Oceana and adjoining counties, where the pigeons are accustomed to stay, are preparing their nets in anticipation of a large catch. The first flocks have put in an appearance.

RT.-REV. SAMUEL ALLEN MCCOSKRY, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Michigan, has resigned the Bishopric, his advanced age being the cause of his retirement. He ranked second in point of seniority among the Bishops of the United States, having been consecrated at St. Paul's Church, Philadelphia, July 7, 1830; while Bishop Smith, of Kentucky, was consecrated four years prior to that time.

AT Niles, on the night of the 11th, some parties, without respect for law or the civil authorities, effected an entrance to the Bank School building, tore up a number of desks on the third floor, piled the books, slates and instruments upon the rostrum and scattered the school furniture generally.

ON the night of the 11th, Chas. Gutteil, a resident of Houghton, committed suicide by drowning. Domestic trouble is said to have caused the act.

A MAGIC building at Cairo, fell, on the 12th, owing to defective foundations. H. P. Atwood and his son and a woman named Donnelly, were buried in the ruins. All were rescued alive, but seriously, and perhaps fatally, injured.

JAMES M. LANE, of Kent County, has been putting in a large amount of logs the past winter in Oceola County. After paying his men off, he had trouble with five of them, which resulted in his shooting two of them—twice with guns. He ran to a log shanty, and they besieged him. They held him a prisoner for a long time, and the sheriff was called. A hearing of it, released him by arresting them, despite their threats to shoot.

AN EVELETH (Minn.) vessel owned by Christian Ulrich, two miles from East Saginaw, was destroyed by an incendiary fire on the morning of the 13th. Loss, $2,000.

THE balance of cash in the State Treasury March 1, 1878, was $900,174.26; receipts during the week ending March 8 were $71,594.64; payments during the same time were $11,120.97; balance in Treasury March 9, 1878, $961,755.93; increase for the week, $60,473.67.

ALD. GARVEY, of Muskegon, was seriously, but not fatally, stabbed, a few days ago, by a man named Hugh Cleghorn. The trouble originated in a discussion about some woman, it is said.

SOME days ago a man named Egert was killed in Munelona, in Antrim County, by one Godfrey Frankey. The latter was at once arrested and lodged in jail. His examination on the charge of murder began on the 12th, and narrowly escaped being a bloody mockery, for some of Egert's friends had armed themselves and intended killing Frankey in the court-room. The Sheriff learned of it fortunately, and disarmed them. The murder grew out of a feud.

PETER PIEPPA, a farmer, living near Scars, on the Flint & Pere Marquette Railway, north of East Saginaw, was instantly killed, on the 13th, by a falling tree.

A FIVE-YEARLING son of Mrs. Clementine Simonds, of Kalamazoo, was fatally scalded, on the afternoon of the 13th, by the tipping over upon him of a boiler of scalding water.

GOV. CROSWELL, on the 15th, appointed the following Board of Trustees to have charge of the new State Insane Asylum at Pontiac: Henry P. Baldwin, of Wayne County; Georg Hendrie, of Van Buren (to serve until Jan. 1, 1883); Willard M. McConnell and Michael E. Crofoot, of Oakland County (until Jan. 1, 1881); Edmund D. Tyler, of Washtenaw; Warren G. Vinton, of Wayne (until Jan. 1, 1879.) The Board are expected to leave the institution properly organized and ready for patients May 1. After that date, by act of the last Legislature, it becomes illegal for county officers to send insane persons to the State-taking charge of his unfortunate wards, thus resulting in what has long been a crying evil in connection with County Poor-Houses.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A printer in Wellsville, N. Y., who has been deaf for many years, was pinned in a highly-heated room last week, to help him out of a case of the chills. He was seized with sharp pains in the head, and fell down insensible. The whistle of a locomotive woke him next morning, and he has since been able to hear well, and speech, which had also almost left him, has returned.

—The Edenburg (Penn.) Herald relates a story about a commercial drummer from Pittsburgh, who, considerably under the influence of liquor, mistook his route and drove his team upon the trestle-work of the Edenburg, Summit & Clarion Railroad, supposing it to be the wagon road. The trestle bridge is sixty feet up from the ground, and about the same length, but the ladies made the crossing, feeling their way in the darkness, step by step, every foot striking a tie securely, until the distance was traversed and they stood in safety on the other side, and just in the nick of time, too, as the night express came thundering by in five minutes after the team had left the track.

—For some weeks Mr. Pierce, who lives in an old brick house near the canal in Georgetown, has heard a peculiar noise at night, and discovered the gradual loss of chickens. He came to the conclusion that a visit was made by rats. Friday night he and his wife were awakened by a sharp cry of distress from the fifth and last pen in which their two-year old baby was sleeping. Mr. Pierce immediately sprang out and discovered a weasel at his child's throat. Catching the animal with his hand he threw it to the floor, killing it at once. A few moments later the little one would certainly have been killed, as a deep gash was already made in its throat. The animal was about eighteen inches long, very slender, with short legs.—Washington (D. C.) Star.

—One of the most miraculous escapes from instant death that we have ever heard recorded is related as having occurred last Saturday morning. A man by the name of W. D. Soy had been to consult a physician in regard to his case, as he had been partially deaf for a number of years. Having finished his business, he started for home on foot, taking the railroad track, and had proceeded but a short distance when he saw a train of cars approaching him, and as the cars came near he stepped upon the eastward-bound track, not looking for or hearing that which was approaching from that direction, but had hardly stepped on the track when he turned to see the engine apparently close upon him. He grasped hold of the pilot or hand of the engine, but as he uncertilly shriek, and awoke to find that he had been dreaming and had his head in his wife's hair, and had partly torn a handful out by the roots.—Elmira (N. Y.) Gazette.

—Ten years ago Michael O'Donnell was a well-to-do market-gardener in a Massachusetts village. One night he heard some one in his garden, and, supposing it to be a thief, fired his revolver at random in the dark for the purpose of frightening away the depredator, and went back to bed. The next morning the body of a girl fifteen years old was found in the garden. O'Donnell was tried, convicted and sentenced to the Penitentiary for life. The other day he was brought before the Governor's Council as a candidate for pardon. His hair was perfectly white and soft, and there was a fixed expression of terror on his face. He walked like an automaton, and to every question seemed only capable of answering yes or no. Even when told that he would be pardoned and allowed to go free again, his expression did not change, and he only repeated the word "yes" in his most mechanical tone.

—Seth Green got his first start in life from a farmer of Michigan, who taught him fish culture and lent him money to begin business.

THE agricultural population of Georgia is 900,000 souls, and the number of acres in cultivation is a trifle over 6,000,000.

VOYAGERS.

We are floating on the River of Time,
Voyagers together we mostcanny glide,
Drifting away to that beautiful clime
Eye hath not seen on the other side.
Yesterday saw us step down from the shore
Into our barks at the dawn of the day—
Others to-morrow will follow us over
For none the glad light of the morning will shirk.

We are mid-way out on the River of Time,
And drift with the tide that we cannot resist:
It is sweeping us on to an ultimate clime
That is hid from our vision in fan-folded mist;
Hailing of land slanged de-silent-ish for our boys
Into-like a shift pontanum enters by;
Sunshine and shadows are over us now;
Is it life or pale death in that wastering sky?

We have almost crossed o'er the River of Time,
What steals from you mist, like some angel-
wrought chime,
Has we still look with courage and hope from the deck?
Aged and silent and grey we have grown,
Tackered and tattered our sails they are torn,
Yet we feel we are coming to friends we have known,
When we enter the gateway of death and of

SPRING SONG.

Oh the little streams are running,
Burrying, purrying!
Oh, the little streams are running
Down the hill!
And the green soft grass is springing,
Springing, springing!
And the green soft grass is springing,
Fast to-day.

Whisper, whisper!
In the woods the breeze whispers
To the flowers;
And the flowers sing their welcome,
Welcome, welcome!
And the robins sing their welcome—
Happy home!

Over all the sun is shining,
Shining, shining!
Over all the sun is shining
Clear and bright!
Flooding lane and waiting meadows,
Meadows, meadows
Flooding lane and waiting meadows
With his light.

A ROMANCE OF LABOR.

The following true incident was brought to my remembrance while listening to the rebellious words of a young man, who could not see his father's wisdom in desiring him to learn a trade.

"It will make a common man of me, father," he said querulously; "I shall be as dirty as a blacksmith, and have hands like a coal-heaver."

"And if you think, Fred, that wearing fine clothes and having white hands makes you a gentleman, let me tell you, sir, you are now a very common man in this town. A good trade might help you to truer notions of gentlemanhood."

Then I looked at the handsome fellow—for he was handsome—and I thought just now of Steve Gaskill, the brave little man who, at the risk of his own life, without any solicitation, sprang out and dragged Fred Braithwaite from the water, when he was drowning, and I thought of Steve's modest refusal of any reward, and of the quiet manner in which he went back to his work.

Fred Braithwaite was the only son of a rich widow, who had been left in affluent circumstances by the death of her husband, a few years before the time of which I write. Fred was a handsome, dashing young fellow, who had been petted and indulged by his mother and sisters, and was the favorite companion of all the young men of his own set. He was not a bad boy, but he was very fond of pleasure, and had no taste for study. He was sent to college, but did not graduate with honor, and was then placed in a counting-house, where he was expected to learn business habits. But he disliked the confinement, and was always finding excuses for absenting himself from his desk. He was very fond of boating, and was an expert oarsman, and it was while out in a pleasure-boat that he fell overboard, and was rescued by Steve Gaskill.

Steve was a mechanic, and worked in the machine-shops of Silverton. He was a quiet, steady young man, who had never been known to be guilty of a dissipated habit. He was a favorite with his employers, and was considered a first-class workman. He was a handsome young fellow, with a frank, manly face, and a pair of honest blue eyes that looked you straight in the face. He was a general favorite with the young people of Silverton, and was a welcome guest in many households. He was a member of the Silver Cornet Band, and played the first violin. He was also a member of the Young Men's Literary Association, and was a constant attendant at the meetings of that society. He was a great reader, and had a taste for poetry and music. He was a young man of good habits, and was considered a model young man by the mothers of marriageable daughters.

Miss Elizabeth Braithwaite, a great heiress, and a very handsome girl, Steve was attracted by her beauty, and her great wealth was no drawback in his eye. In a short time he perceived that Miss Braithwaite favored him above all other pretenders to her hand, and he began to consider the advantages of a rich wife.

His profession hitherto had been a failure: his £1,000 were nearly spent; his three sisters were all on the point of marriage, a condition which might seriously magnify their modesty instincts; and his mother's annual income would not support him a month—would it not be the best plan to accept the good fortune so evidently within his reach?

Elizabeth was handsome and inclined to favor him, and though she had the reputation of being both unamiable in temper and economical in money matters, he did not doubt that she would make him a kind husband, provided he was completely as his mother and sisters. So he set himself to win Miss Braithwaite, and before Christmas they were married.

True, he had been compelled to give up a great deal more than he liked; but he promised himself plenty of pecuniary compensations. Elizabeth insisted on retaining her own house, and as Steve had really no home to offer her, he must needs go to Braithwaite Hall, as the husband of its proprietress. She insisted upon his removing his office to that centre, and Steve, after offering none of the advantages for killing time which a large city like Leeds did, and having a horror of travelling none of the disadvantages for killing time which a large city like Leeds did, and having a horror of travelling every day, and a positive dislike to being absolutely settled upon herself for her own use and under her own control,

Steve felt very much as though his wife had bought him; but for a little time, the eclat of having married a great heiress, the bridal festivities, and Leigh travel, compensated for the loss of his freedom. But when they returned to Braithwaite, life showed him a far more prosaic side. Mrs. Gaskill's economical disposition soon became particularly offensive to Steve. She inquired closely into his business, and did not scruple to make unpleasant witty remarks about his income. She rapidly developed to an authoritative disposition, against which Steve rebelled more and more rebellel. The young couple were soon very unhappy.

Steve perceived that a great transition was taking place in Steve's mind, and times of transition are always times of unrest and misery. The better part of Steve's nature was beginning to learn a bearing. He had seen now all that good society could show him; he had tasted of its pleasures money can buy, and he was unhappy.

She had no ennui and no dissatisfaction with herself. There was her large house to oversee, her gardens and conservatories, her servants and charity-schools, her toilet and a whole colony of pet animals. Her days were too short for all the small interests that filled them; and these interests she would willingly have shared with Steve, but to him they soon became intolerable.

Under such circumstances he might have found his work in the ordering of his wife's large estate; but Elizabeth was far too jealous of her woman to trust it in untried hands. The father's agent was her agent; her banker managed all her investments; her park and farms and gardens were all under the care of old and experienced servants, who looked upon Steve merely as "Missies husband."

In the second year of his marriage he began to have some thoughts which would have astonished his wife, could she have thought it worth while to inquire what occupied his mind in the long, hours when he paced the floor of his shrubbery or sat silently looking out of the window. But Steve was now ready for any employment that would take him out of the purposeless, dependent life which he had so foolishly chosen for himself.

One day, greatly to his surprise, Elizabeth said to him:

"Steve, I have a letter from a cousin of my mother's who lives in Glasgow. She is going to Australia, and wants me to buy her house. She says it is a great bargain, and I wrote to Barrett to go and see about it. I have a letter this morning saying he is too ill to leave his bed. I wonder if you could go and attend to it?"

Anything for a change. Steve showed a very proper business-like interest, and said:

"Yes, he would be very glad to go."

"Very well; I should think you knew enough of titles and deeds, and conveyancing, and all that kind of thing. I will trust the affair to you, Steve."

So the next morning Steve found himself on the Caledonian line, with £100 in his pocket, and a veritable piece of business on hand. The first twenty miles out of Leeds he enjoyed with the delight of a bird set free, then he began to think again.

At Crewe he missed a train, and wandering about the station, fell in talk with the engineer of the next one, who was cleaning and examining the engine with all the love and pride a mother gives a favorite child.

The two men fraternized at once, and Steve made a trip over the Caledonian in the engineer's cabin. He was a fine young fellow, "one of seven," he said, all machinists and engineers; he was only serving his time, learning every branch of his business practically; he had brothers who made engineers, and he hoped to do so some time.

In spite of his soiled face and oily clothes, Steve recognized that refinement that comes with education; and when his new friend called upon him at the Queen's Hotel, he would not be ashamed of his appearance, even in the most fastidious days.

"Mr. Dairympic, I am glad to see you," said Steve, holding out both hands to him.

"I thought you would be, sir: it is not often I am mistaken in my likings. I will go with you now to see my father's works, if it suits you."

Never had such a place entered Stephen Gaskill's conception; the immense furnaces, the hundreds of giants working around them, the clang of machinery, the mighty struggle of mind with the matter, of intellect over the resistance. He carried those cyclops in their leathern masks and aprons; he longed to lift their mighty hammers. He looked upon the craftsmen with their bare, brawny arms and blackened hands, and felt his heart glow with admiration when he saw the mighty works those hands had fashioned. The tears were in his eyes when Andrew Dairympic and he parted at the gate of the great works in Leeds.

"Thank you," he said, "you have done me the greatest possible service. I shall remember it."

That night Steve formed a strange, but noble, resolution. First of all, he devised himself to his wife' business, and he accomplished it in a manner which elicited Mr. Barrett's warm praise and made Elizabeth wonder whether she might not spare her agent's stress for the future. Then he took long, confidential talk with the owner of the Dairympic Iron and Machine Works, the result of which was the following letter to Mrs. Gaskill:

MY DEAR WIFE: I shall not be at home again for at least two years. For I have begun an apprenticeship to Thomas Dairympic here as an engineer. I shall learn the business practically. I have lived too long upon your bounty for I have had your esteem as well as my own, and I do not say but I have deserved the loss. Please God, I will redeem my wasted past, and with His help make a mass of myself. When I am worthy to be your husband you will respect me, and until then think as kindly as possible of your STEPHEN GASKILL.

This letter struck the first noble chord in Elizabeth's heart. From that hour not even her favorite maid dare make her little compassionate sneer at "poor master."

Steve, in leather apron and coarse working clothes, began laboriously happy days which brought him nights of sweet sleep and Elizabeth began a series of letters to her husband which probably grew more and more imbued with his interest and respect. In a few weeks she visited him of her own free will, and purposely going to the works, saw her self-banished lord and master in glorious linsmuer upon a bar of white-hot iron.

Swarthy, bare-armed, clothed in leather, he had never looked so handsome in Elizabeth's eyes; and her eyes revealed this fact to Steve, for in them was the tender light of a love founded upon a genuine respect. Steve observed it. He wrought faithfully out his two years' service, cheered by his wife's letters and visits, and when he came out of the Dairympic Works there was no more polished iron-master than he.

He held his head frankly up now, and looked Fortune boldly in the face; he could dare her own lieing anywhere.

Mr. Dairympic, who had become a great friend to Steve, holding out both hands to him.

"I thought you would be, sir: it is not often I am mistaken in my likings. I will go with you now to see my father's works, if it suits you."

Never had such a place entered Stephen Gaskill's conception; the immense furnaces, the hundreds of giants working around them, the clang of machinery, the mighty struggle of mind with the matter, of intellect over the resistance. EDITOR SENTINEL

Good old St. Patrick had no cause this year to complain of any lack of respect shown to his memory in the great city of New York. His day falling on Sunday, intending participants in the festival had an extra twenty-four hours of anticipation and preparation, and on Monday morning all the transplanted Hibernians of Manhattan and the surrounding country—they of the "shild leens" and the "potheen," the shillalah and the shamrock—whether of high or low degree, were up and stirring, and all agog for the pleasures of their holiday. These persons, as far as my observation extended, considered mainly in having a very long procession, liberally interspersed with bands of music, and in getting very, very drunk, as, indeed, every true Irishman is in duty bound to do on each anniversary of his patron saint. The procession was really an imposing one, including many detachments of the military, a dozen or more Irish societies, and an innumerable company of such enthusiastic laymen as could muster a black coat and a stove pipe hat. Green was of course the prevailing color of the occasion, and was extensively manifest. Green flags floated from every staff controlled in any way by this nationality; all the men wore green neckties or badges, all the women green dresses or ribbons, and and the haulgear of thousands of horses was resplendent with the same verdant decorations. In the evening there were the usual assortment of meetings, dinners, speeches and revels.

Speaking of Irishmen reminds me that our distinguished Fenian fellow townsman, O'Donovan Rossa, has been distinguishing himself this week at Toronto, whither he went to lecture, by provoking a street riot and having himself to flee for his life. The newspaper dispatches tell us that in the progress of the small sized war that Rossa precipitated, every policeman in Toronto was more or less injured. As a firebrand, O'Donovan seems to be a success.

Another peculiar festival fell within the week just passed. This was the Jewish masquerade feast of Purim of which the principal feature consists in keeping open house for the reception of maskers of both sexes. This evening many Jews and Jewesses, of all classes, dressed in fancy costumes, demons and masks, go round in parties of ten or twenty, calling at all the Jewish houses which are known to be "open" in honor of the feast, and there disport themselves to the amusement of the guests assembled to receive them. In some cases regular parties are given, to receive these maskers and invitations are sent out. As there are some 80,000 Jews in New York city, it will be seen that any festivities in which they join generally becomes quite noticeable.

Last week I gave a description of the operation of the phonograph, in which I said something about the rapid succession of astonishing inventions. The picture of that remark is illustrated by the fact that since writing that letter I have learned of a brand new contrivance of the same inventor, called the aerophone, which can be put on steam engines instead of the ordinary whistle, and is good for tunes that can be heard at least four miles, be made to call out any words desired. For instance, if it is on a factory, it will perhaps yell, "Time for Dinner!" or "Come to Work!" and if on a locomotive, "Get off the Track!" or while yet far away shriek to the next station, "Bangtown, look out for number three!" What the next contrivance will be no one can foretell, but I promise to chronicle it faithfully, even if it's patent air line rapid transit railroad to the moon.

Which mention of rapid transit reminds me to say that our elevated railway extension is formerly on. The building of the fifteen road has progressed with incredible rapidity. Its sections seem to spring out of the earth day by day like a growth of enormous mushroom, and already Sixth Avenue and West Broadway are filled with an arching forest of iron beams and girders. At this rate another month will see trains running on the route. The Pullman Car Company are hard at work on the cars, for building sixty of which they have a contract. These cars are to be very elegant, after the manner of the Pullmans. I shall perhaps describe them later.

An extraordinary complication has arisen between the city and national governments. The ground on which our million dollar post office stands was sold to Uncle Sam by the city of New York, and in the conveyance a clause was introduced stipulating that if the building was ever used for any other purposes than those specified in the instrument, the sale should be void and the property should revert to the city. Either in ignorance or in defiance of this condition, the present Secretary of the Treasury has caused parts of the post office building to be exempted for purposes forbidden in the grant, and we are now confronted by the somewhat startling assertion of the city's right to seize the property according to agreement. Of course it is not likely that any such action would be attempted, but it is probable that Mr. Sherman will have to take the back track on his plan for the occupancy of the structure.

The Aquarians is in hard luck. Of the two valuable companzees, which I mentioned a few weeks since as having created a Darwinian discussion on their arrival, one is dead and the other is dying. They have cost a great deal of money and were the only specimens of this animal in America. To add to the funereal gloom that pervades this wonder place, "Barry," the glossy, curl mained young hippopotamus, who has for a year formed one of its prominent attractions, has just shuffled off some ton and a half of mortal coil which, when animated by the soul which now has doubtless returned to haunt the luxuriant marshes of the Nile, was estimated worth $20,000.

An unfortunate physician of week judgement in Brooklyn was sent to the State prison the other day because he was not content to let well enough alone. He had been indicted for a crime, and the indictment failed for lack of the evidence of the person expected to be principal witness against him. Thereupon he sued a professional rival for conspiracy, and the witness was found and the man was indicted anew, with the result just mentioned. He is probably engaged now in collecting how much better off he would have been if he had not attempted spiteful personal revenge against a man who had told the truth about him.

Another attempt is being made by pretended heirs at law to have the probate of Mr. Alexander Stewart's will set aside and a new division of the property made.

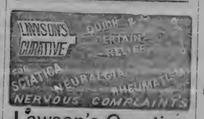
A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and snowfalls often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Colds, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Gruner, will tell you. Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar is now sold in every town and village on the continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c; regular size, 75c.



Lawson's Curative

HAS been in use some fifteen years, for the permanent and positive cure of

and inflammatory diseases. Externally applied it gives immediate relief from pain. Three doses of two bottles taken internally removes every trace of the disease. We have cured Hundreds of FIFTEEN YEARS' STANDING, which all other remedies have failed. We have seen those worn out with suffering from relieved from pain in a few hours, then permanently cured, so as after years the disease has never returned. The Curative destroys the poison in the blood, which produces the disease. DIPHTHERIA is robbed of its terrors, with a bottle of Curative at hand. It destroys the virus and prevents the formation of the poisonous patches. It cures DYSPEPSIA, as it neutralizes and fermentation of the food and gets up a vigorous, healthy appetite which seeks relief in Rum drinking. The Curative does NOT CONTAIN ANY ALCOHOL OR STIMULANTS. SPUNKY OR INFLAMED GUMS are cured by a few applications. Those who have used it have told the master in stronger terms than we have ever used.

Price ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE. If not for sale by your druggists, send us one Dollar, and we will send you a bottle by return, prepaid.

"German Syrup"

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, Severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist, and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo. W. Gruner.

Have Women Business Ability.

A few weeks ago, in one of the comfortable sleeping coaches which have so reduced the weariness of travel, we left Boston on a train bound outward for the West. There were not more than half a dozen persons beside ourselves in the car, and this scarcity of travelers made conversation general, and established friendly and social relations between people who had never seen each other before, and did not, even then, know each other's names.

In the section just behind ours, four gentlemen had seated themselves, and were talking concerning matters of general and sometimes local interest.

Occupied with a book, we gave little heed to their conversation until our attention was suddenly arrested by hearing one of them exclaim, with much emphasis. "Yes, sir! I believe that, as a rule, women are more economical than men. You see, woman can't waste much money if she tries; she's obliged to spend it on herself, on her jewels and laces, her silks and satins and furbelows of one kind and another. All these, however, can be turned into money again; and the more ragged and dirty and dingy a piece of lace is, the better a woman likes it, and the more money it will bring. But now just look at the men, and think for a moment of the enormous sums of money spent every year on fast horses, gambling, wines and tobacco; things that represent not capital invested, but capital sunk, wasted. Why, if a man sets about it, he can waste more money in one year than a woman can spend in five."

"I guess you're right," assented his neighbor; "and—" dropping his voice to a low tone and speaking slowly, as though he were about to tell something which, though true, was entirely beyond his comprehension—"I'll bet a supper that my wife can tell exactly how much money she has had in the last ten years, and just what every cent was used for."

"How about yourself," asked another three, "can you do the same?"

"Not much!" was the emphatic answer. "I've had a good many attacks of book-keeping in my time, but I get over them in just about four days. By that time the thing won't balance, and I give it up."

A hearty laugh followed this frank confession, and then a lady who sat by the opposite window turned and said, with a half smile, "And yet, I suppose that if any one were to ask you if your wife has any business ability, you would say no?"

"Well, ma'am, I suppose I should. We men don't generally reckon on a woman's having much business ability; but I'm not sure they haven't got it in spite of us."

Here the conversation drifted into other channels, but it started a train of thought in our own mind not long perhaps do the same for some of our readers.

Do we not all know women, who, with inadequate means at their command, have struggled for years against trials, difficulties and obstacles, which, to the more timid, seemed simply appalling? Women who have made a home pleasant and attractive to their children; who, by the exercise of qualities which would have made good business men of them, had they been men instead of women, have given these children education and accomplishments.

These women are sagacious; quick to see where their interests lie, and always ready to avail themselves of fortunate circumstances. Upright and conscientious in all their dealings, they are not forgetful of the fact that the world owes them place and station and recognition. Respecting themselves, they are respected by others, and have the confidence of all who know them.

There is an adjective peculiarly American in its significance, and of the widest comprehensiveness which people apply to such women. They are smart. A woman who manages her household affairs with such prudence, foresight and economy as to excite the admiration of her neighbors, who is always neat in appearance though she may not possess any fine clothes; who, though a hard worker, finds time to read and thus enlarge the horizon of her otherwise narrow world, is invariably spoken of as a "smart woman."

She is not a business woman because her smartness has never been turned in that direction; but that she has the ability to carry on business, we do not for a moment doubt.

She could not do it at once, of course; any more than a man could do her work put into her place. But she would soon learn.

We are not to be understood as discussing the advisability of women engaging in business affairs which are usually conducted by men. We are simply entering a protest against the remark one hears too frequently, "what are women good for in business?"—Rural New Yorker.

Fighting a Flood.

Such a storm as raged in Sacramento on Wednesday and Wednesday night was never so pertinenced before, and nothing but a change in the wind prevented an overflow from the south side. The scene on the R street levee, yesterday afternoon, was a grand one. The wind whistled and hissed, the waves roared and dashed and leaped upon the soil in glee, as if laughing at the impotence of man's work when the elementary legions sounded the charge. The foam and spray sprang upon the railroad and rolled back again to join the invading force. The pitiless rain came down in torrents, beating in the faces of those who marched out to the rescue. The water leaping on the track, aided by the torrents of rain, had made it so slippery that it was difficult to obtain a foothold, and the wind, rushing violently through the open space south and coming with such tremendous force, made it difficult walking.

In the face of this blinding storm the citizens turned out nobly to the rescue. Bankers, doctors, lawyers, brokers, journalists, the wealthy and the poverty-stricken, some in elegant suits and others almost in rags, with one common impulse, worked like beavers in a common cause. The water dashed around and over them, and the rain ceased not in force, the wind blew in heavy gales, and slush and filth were ankle deep, clothes were ruined, arms tired and stomachs hungry, but still they worked on side by side, and the situation was dangerous for a time. The angry waves were eating slowly but surely into the earth, as if anxious to tear out the very heart of the levee. Men were ankle deep—some waist deep—in water, while the storm never ceased and the waves still dashed on. Shovels were plied with astonishing rapidity, and sacks filled almost as soon as found. The wealth and cream of the city shoveled dirt for the poor to carry, or stood in the storm and slush while some poor fellow, almost in rags, filled the sack he held and conveyed it to the weak spot. From one until after seven o'clock they stood at their posts in all the rain and slush and storm, and only left when all was safe and the danger ended.—Sacramento (Cal.) Bee.

Sun Spots and Their Effects.

During the last half century there has been observed, formulated and verified by accurate prediction, one of those uniformities of change, called laws, that may deserve to rank in human interest next after those two most obvious and momentous changes that men know, viz.: The rotation of the earth apparent in the recurrence of light and dark, and the revolution of the earth apparent in the unceasing succession of the years.

An obscure German astronomer—Adolph Schwabe, of Dessau—began in 1826, at first with his naked eyes, to count, measure and record the spots upon the sun, if any, every day in face could be seen, as so perchance, to discern any ebb or dow at the fountain of all terrestrial energy. He went out like a lamp."

"Well, ma'am, I suppose I should. We men don't generally reckon on a woman's having much business ability; but I'm not sure they haven't got it in spite of us."

Here the conversation drifted into other channels, but it started a train of thought in our own mind not long perhaps do the same for some of our readers.

Something Exasperating.

If there is anything particularly exasperating to a woman who is the head of the family, it is for her husband to insinuate that she has nothing to do. Some men are continually making that remark, and if ever their wives regret having married them, it is very likely to be on just such an occasion as that.

The fact is, men of that class don't know anything about it. If they could be changed into women and mothers, and kept at it for a fortnight, they would sing a different tune.

They come into the house generally after the most of the work is done. They see their wives in the parlor, mending stockings, and the baby is asleep, and the other children, tired out with mischief, have subsided into patterns of propriety. The busy housewife has got the breakfast, and washed the dishes, and swept the floors, and blacked the stove, and scalded over the preserves, and baked pies and a pudding for dinner, and set the bread, gotten, to rise, and got dinner out of the way, and done up a basketful of shirts and collars for this man who thinks she has nothing to do, and brushed the frettful baby for two hours before she went to sleep, and washed and dressed the three other children, and now, just as she has changed her dress, and thrown herself, weary and dispirited, into the rocking-chair, in comes her husband and flings his hat on the sofa, and his coat on a chair, and snaps out:

"I wish I were a woman. Nothing to do but sit in a cool room, and darn some other light work. Women have nothing to do."

The man does not mean it unkindly, perhaps, but he is thoughtless, and perhaps he has been bred in the belief that women have an easy time of it. And he is tired and out of sorts, and he fairly seeks to find fault with somebody. And what should man have a wife for if he cannot have the privilege of finding fault with her? If he should adopt the fault-finding course with Bridget, or the cook, she would give warning at once and demand her month's wages, but unless he lives in Indiana his wife almost conveniently follow Bridget's example.

It is, of course, true that some women have very little to do, and very little of what we call care falls to them. But they are the exception, and not the rule. Fully two-thirds of the women in this country work for a living, and do it faithfully—all honor to them for it —and the husband who does not sympathize with the wife who toils day by day, to keep the house orderly, to care for the children, to make his home tidy, and sweet, and comfortable, is quite up to the limit of her slender strength, ofttimes beyond, ought to be transmogrified into a woman himself, and be compelled to do the work for eight in a family, and take care of a pair of teething twins in the bargain.

There are noble examples of what husbands should be among the somewhat extensive circle of our acquaintance. Men who are worthy of the name—who do honor to their sex, and many of them are hard toilers for the daily bread, and few of them sport the white hands of genteel do-nothings. Intelligent and ignorant, as opposed they might be described, but they have the souls of noblemen—if nobleness souls are any better than the average—and they are not above splitting the kindling-wood and pumping the water, and bringing the baby while the wife gets breakfast or clears away the supper-dishes.

It is, no doubt, beautiful to paint pictures, and write essays on true nobility, and entrance listening multitudes with the voice of eloquence; and we have profound admiration for the men who can do any of these things, and do them well; but if we were looking for a husband to set up housekeeping with, we would give more for a man who would "chore round" washing days, and be willing to get up now and then with that baby when it had the colic, than we would for all the artists and orators in the world.

We know we are not high-toned, and we ask pardon of high-toned people for it, but in this practical, hard-working, every-day world, we want men and not dreamers.

And so we say to husbands, do not tell your wives they have nothing to do, when you see how close, close, they are hard day's work, but give them a word of praise for what they have done instead, and our word for it your breakfast will be better cooked and your shirt-bosoms glossier; for there is nothing a wife likes better than the appreciation of her husband.—Independent.

Choosing a Wife by Proxy.

The following occurred on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Road: A gentleman traveling from Dublin and Kansas City was engaged in conversation by a very intelligent but rough looking miner, who had begun for four years an auriferous adventure in the San Juan country, and who had "struck it rich." He made known to the fact that his visit was a certain Mich. igan was for the purpose of marrying the "girl he left behind him," for whose future comfort he had built and furnished a house high up among the snow-capped mountains of Colorado. But this does not interest the reader as will the balance of the story. He left in San Juan a partner, whom he describes "as square a man as ever struck a drift," with whom he had constantly labored three long years as mere "prospectors," and with whom he now jointly held one of the most valuable properties in their district. Jim, too, desired to go East, but their mutual interests made it impossible; he didn't know any men in particular East, but then he wanted to go. Jim was rather a bashful, reticent man, and did not like to tell even his partner the real purpose of his coveted visit; but upon the eve of the departure of the latter, the purpose of whose visit was known, Jim made the request, in dead earnest, that he bring him a wife. "Will you do it?" he was asked. "Do it, you bet!" "Had he any instructions to give in regard to the selection?" "Yes," he said, "Harry, bring me a good, honest, sensible girl, what there's no foolishness or show about—a girl what'll make an honest man an honest wife," and that's just the kind o' woman I'll take out, and the one that'll be Jim's wife." While this manner of choosing a wife is a somewhat novel one, it must be confessed that Jim's ideas of the woman best calculated to make with him the journey of life was a good one.—*Denver (Col.) The Hermit of Cavan's Point.

John J. Ball, the Hermit of Cavan's Point, N. J., died on Monday, and was buried on the same day in Potter's Field. He was seventy-six years of age, and was a thorough recluse. His only intimates were dogs, thirteen of which were in his cabin when he died. He would allow no human being to cross his threshold if he could help it. The reporter was crouching without the door on Wednesday five mongrel dogs whining for admittance, and as the door was thrown open they leaped upon the straw tick on which the hermit died and howled. Some rustics, attracted by the visitor, gathered around and joked and laughed. The cabin was crowded with a stove in the center, the tick in one corner in a long box covered with a piece of carpet, a rag-table on one side and a carpenter's bench on the other, and was situated with fragments of old iron, junk, wood, horns of cattle, and all kinds of useless rubbish. Clam-shells were heaped up just outside of the doorway. On chairs, dug from the beach, the neighbors say, the hermit and his canine companions subsisted.

In many ways he was a remarkable man. His thirst for reading was insatiable, and he would stop on the road and talk by the hour on political economy and history. His political views were strong and midsmayed. He would fiercely defend them in the midst of a throng of threatening passengers. While roaming along the beach, with all his dogs at his heels, he has been heard to pick up specimens and mend assertedly studying them until those who saw him tired of looking. On the most unimportant objects around him he would talk learnedly and with interest. He was noted beside for his misery of many trades. He was an adept at painting, shoemaking, carpentering, kalsomining, plastering and sign-painting, and he made gentlemen's coats.

He was sensitive and proud to the last in being self-dependent. To offer him alms was to offend and hurt him; but he would take in provisions three times the value of his services in filing a saw, patching a shoe, riveting a jack-knife, or mending a gun.

Little is known of his history. Six years ago he entered the empty cabin. Before that he had lived in an old canal-boat on the shore of Mile Creek. Incendiaries burned the boat one day in his absence, together with all his books, and a library that he had collected. It is said that two burglars who broke into the boat and robbed him were sent to the State Prison for five years each. The history of his life he would never tell, although often pressed to do so. His birthplace was in Northern Vermont, and he lived for years in Meriden and New Haven, Conn. He has a brother, a shipbuilder, in New Haven, to whom the news of his death was sent. There is a gap in his history that he could never fill. Suddenly he took to tramping, and at the time of the Seminole War he was in Florida trapping, hunting and fishing. Then he wandered westward to Texas, and came back in time to go to Mexico in the Mexican War. His wanderings ended in Jersey. Whilst the black prairie soils, the corn soils, par excellence, whether they lie in Texas or further north, are too much nitrogen and humus in their composition to produce good crops of wheat after the third or fourth one has been taken off, unless they are subjected to a special course of preparatory treatment, which reduces the amounts both of humus and nitrogen, the white and yellow clays, after bearing two or three similar crops, require an addition of these substances, in the form of some amendment or fertilizer, which has a tendency to improve the mechanical texture of the soil, by rendering it less compact and indurated, and the surface addition of manure of some kind to supply the needed quantity of nitrogen.

Thus, in Southern Illinois, and especially on the post-oak flats and yellow and white clay lands, and magnesian lands, a light coating of manure spread on wheat-fields any time after seeding, and while the grass and clover are growing, increases the growth of straw and yield of grain out of all proportion to what might be logically inferred from the quantity applied. And where barn or stable manure is not to be had, or where it is tough and used by the truck-patch men, which is a market for these vegetables among the workmen gathered in the mining towns within the coal districts, it has been ascertained that the ashes of coal-black spread liberally on the surface previous to the preliminary plowing for the wheat-crop produces results nearly equally surprising. Not only do these coal ashes improve the texture and mechanical condition of the soil, but they evidently contribute some important element of plant-food, or perhaps some of their constituent elements act as a solvent to substances already in the soil, and in that way benefit the wheat-plants for it has already been established by repeated experiments that a three-inch coating of coal ashes spread on the surface before plowing acts as successfully and surely as stable manure spread after sowing, or during the winter months.

All through the coal mining districts and counties of the States named above there have accumulated vast piles of these wastes of the coal mines, and the problem has been how to get rid of them with the least possible expense to the operators of the mines, and the ascertainment of the fact that they have considerable value as an amendment and fertilizer to the soils lying about, and that they will be, sooner or later, so used and consumed, may be regarded in the light of a great public benefit.

So also in the timbered bluff regions of the States named, where sawmills have been established for a longer or shorter period, and are now taking up the timber in shape to go upon the market of the country, there are to be seen great piles of slabs, which have heretofore been considered of so little value that they have been allowed to accumulate, like coal-black, they actually cumber the ground.

But it is beginning to be understood that the culture of vineyards and orchards to produce fruit, after two or three successful crops, is one probably to the exhaustion in the soil of potash therein contained, so that already the more inquiring and enlightened fruit-growers are gathering up all the wood ashes within their reach and applying them to their potash-exhausted orchards and vineyards. But few only of these gentlemen have learned that potash, placed on the surface, whether in the form of ashes or otherwise, remains there, and that to get the full benefit of such application within a limited time it is necessary to have the feeding-roots at their extremities, and apply the potash at those points.

In view of these facts we are led to the following, among other important conclusions: That for light-colored, compact clays and magnesian lands, post-oak flats, and dead, level prairie wheat soils, when sown to wheat, there is no way in which manure from the barn or stable can be used to so much advantage as to spread a light coat of the same about the time of seeding, or soon after seeding the better; but better still than previous to the first of March than not at all; that in the vicinity of coal mines, where coal ashes are to be had, it will pay the farmer, whether he proposes to grow wheat, or grass, or corn, or vegetables, to coat his fields over with at least three inches of coal-ashes previous to plowing, with the certainty that, while the benefits of the work will show at once, they will continue to show in the same way much longer than stable manure, and for the reason that the manure is largely made up of vegetable matter, which sooner decays and disappears, while the ashes are composed of minerals like the substance of the hills, and have a life everlasting like them; and finally, that the ashes now wasting in the neighborhood of saw-mills should be gathered up and used in the same way; that orchards and vineyards of the country around them; and for the reason not only that labor abounds, whether new or old, leached or unleached, are but a part of the substances of a gigantic old vegetable mass reduced to its lowest terms, that they are the main masses out of which the forms of the new vegetation are to be created and sustained; and, finally, they contain the material to furnish those potash and other alkaline bases, without a liberal supply of which no soil can be made or kept rich and permanent fruitfulness in vineyards and orchards, no matter how favorably situated, planted and kept.—Home and Farm.

The Season.

The West has always been remarkable for the peculiarities of its climate. Its characteristic, however, is that it has warm, dry autumnal weather in the autumn; mild winters with rain, and storms during the winter, and in their intensity of cold. The present winter has, so far, been unprecedented in the history of the West, for the last forty years, in the amount of rain and the absence of frost, succeeded during the latter part of February, and up to this writing, March 6, by mild, balmy and most genial spring weather. Journals are beginning to call attention to the fact, that in 1837 the commencement ranged below zero all through the month of March, and utter warnings to beware. That winter was a very cold one, with the frost deep in the ground, and a heavy burden of snow over the country. This year there is no frost, no snow; the water of the streams and lakes is warm, and the temperature of the earth is that of late autumn, rather than that of spring. We may have unpleasant storms yet, but we can have no prolonged severe weather. Frogs have piped, off and on, all winter, and the robins, larks, bobolinks and other spring birds appeared on the last day of February about Chicago. The winter wheat, and the grass, have grown all winter, and no heaving has been experienced. The probabilities, therefore, are, that we shall have another season of heavy crops of wheat, and deep meadows and pastures. With favorable weather, the spring wheat crops may be got in early, and, when so sown, the result is, as a rule, full crops. It is to be hoped every farmer will avail himself of this state of the weather, if it lasts, to sow without delay.

The amount of rain which the West has received during the last summer, autumn and winter, would leave the inference natural that we may expect a change, and that the present season may be suitably dry. Early spring sowings give tolerable assurance of heavy small grain crops. A warm June, July and August will make the corn crop—the great staple of the West —immense. Another great crop would put the West all right. Let every farmer use his best endeavors to do his part, and trust in Providence for full garners.—Prairie Farmer.

AT this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If salines is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks, or prostrating fevers generally follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that invaluable household remedy, SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

Simmons' Liver Regulator has been in use for half a century and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time, according to the directions. It is without doubt the greatest Liver Medicine in the world; is positively harmless, being carefully compounded from pure vegetable and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of calomel and quinine, and has superseded these terrible pills in places where they have heretofore been extensively used. Five cents a dose at open iron your druggist, do not delay, give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION!

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no Powders or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, unless in our engraved Wrapper, with Trade Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 19th, the House bill to authorize the granting of an American register to a foreign-built steamer for the purpose of the Wanderl Scientific Expedition Around the World was passed without amendment. A heated debate occurred on the question of appropriating money to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the prosecution of timber thieves. A Conference Committee was ordered on the Senate amendments to the Military Academy appropriation bill. In the House, majority and minority reports were made on the bill for the creation of a forest reserve in Colorado, the former declaring Mr. Dulk to be unfit for the office, and recommending a resolution declaring the office vacant, and the latter declaring that no corruption had been proven, or even charged, against Mr. Dulk, and would be a grievous wrong to adopt the majority resolution. Bills were passed—fixing the compensation of jurors in United States courts at the rate of three to two dollars; making the fees of Clerks of said courts; fixing the compensation of United States Marshals and Deputies; increasing that of the former from $3,000, Chief Justice to $7,500, and other Deputies five dollars per day. Senate bill appointing Gen. Sherman Register of the Smithsonian Institution, in place of Gen. Joseph[illegible], deceased. A bill was passed to authorize the coinage of gold and silver on the same terms. The House Pacific Railway bill (S. 86.65) was considered in Committee of the Whole.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 20th—for the protection of homestead settlers on public lands; to repeal the Pre-emption laws and provide for the sale of timber on the public lands. The bill making appropriations for deficiency requirements, for public lands in certain States, and for other purposes, was further considered. The morning question coming on as an amendment by Mr. Beck forbidding any charge for wood or timber on the public lands in the Territories for the use of actual settlers, not for export, and providing that in the event of timber being exported from the Territory where the land is, the United States Senator from the United States sitting in the 20th district of Congress, was announced by the Committee on Conference on the bill for the appointment of Commissioners to report on the subject of coinage, to report a double metallic standard, the coinage for an equal gold and silver bullion certificates, and to refuse certain silver coinage. The House bills were introduced and referred—providing that certain lands in Michigan be granted to actual settlers and settlers under Homestead acts, shall receive, through the Secretary of the Interior, free seeds received by the Secretary of Agriculture, farming utensils and provisions for their use and sale when they effects by cultivation; to provide for a more economical survey of public lands, to regulate a system of superintendence of railways. A large number of private Bills—principally pensions—were passed. Adjourned to the 23d.

An amendment was submitted in the Senate, on the 23d, to the House bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act, providing that on and after July 1, 1878, United States legal-tender notes shall be receivable for all debts and dues, both public and private, etc. A bill was introduced and referred to protect the waters of all lakes, rivers and streams upon public lands from sale, and to dedicate the same to the purposes use of the inhabitants. Mr. How called up his resolution asking the President for information in regard to the alleged defalcation of Judge Wilkes, of Louisiana, and such a resolution was passed in which he denounced the course of the Administration in its dealings with the Louisiana and the Civil Service Reform. As passed and under Rule 27, 1,534 bills were introduced and referred in the House, among them—to segregate the arrearages of the education and advancement of the colored people; to regulate the time of holding the terms of the branch mint at Carson[illegible]; [illegible] to change or modify the tariff. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to increase the coinage of gold and silver on the same terms, and to prevent the export of coin, was lost—yeas 127, nays 127—not two-thirds in the affirmative. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill to amend the operation of the Bankrupt act, was lost—yeas 127, nays 127—also rejected—122 to 132—not two-thirds in the affirmative.

THE Massachusetts Legislature has lately passed an act—and the Governor has my signed the same—it is now a law—giving to the Board of Commissioners of Savings Banks the right, whenever it judges that "the security and welfare of the depositors require it," to limit the amount and time of payment to them. The law is to continue in force for three years.

FOREIGN.

A VIENNA dispatch of the 20th says Gen. Tcherkesky, late Provisional Governor of Bulgaria, had committed suicide because he had been threatened with removal.

AT London, on the 20th, the Earl of Rosebery was married to Miss Hannah de Rothschild. The fair bride brought her husband the comfortable dowry of between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

A ROME (Italy) telegram of the 20th says the proclamation of the Catholic Hierarchy in Scotland would be made at the next Consistory.

THE official text of the treaty between Turkey and Russia was published on the 20th. It is substantially as heretofore published. It was believed in London, on the same day, that Great Britain would resist with all the means at her disposal the absorption of territory in Asia Minor by Russia.

ACCORDING to the Hungarian papers of the 21st, Count Andrassy, the Austrian Premier, had, on the preceding day, absolutely declined to enter into an alliance with Great Britain against Russia. It was reported that Sir H. G. Elliott, the British Ambassador, had thereupon declared that England would not participate in the Congress. It was believed, in Pesth, that an Austro-Russian alliance had been formed.

A REPORT was received in London, on the 23d, to the effect that a revolution had broken out in Roumania and that Prince Charles had been compelled to flee the country. A dispatch, received on the morning of the 24th, stated that Roumania had refused to accept Independence at the hands of Russia, or permit the passage of Russian troops over her territory during the occupation of Bulgaria.

ACCORDING to St. Petersburg specials of the 22d, no matter how willing Russia might be to withdraw her troops from Turkey, it could not be done so long as the British fleet remained in Turkish waters. The tone of the Russian press was exceedingly belligerent. It was reported that Russia had demanded that the British fleet quit the Sea of Marmora at once, claiming that its presence there was a violation of the Treaty of Berlin. Official news of a defiance of the provisions of established treaties.

ACCORDING to a dispatch from St. Petersburg, published on the 24th, Russia, in view of the threatening aspect of her relations with Great Britain, had decided not to remove her forces from the vicinity of Constantinople at present. Their withdrawal was estimated at $55,000 and their assets at $45,000.

THE residence of Col. Horace Johnson, at Benzonia, was burned on the morning of the 23d. Loss about $5,000. Mr. Johnson was badly burned.

ON the 19th, at Ann Arbor, a lively spat occurred between Judge Cooley and Granger, counsel for the University in the Swift-Williams case. Granger moved to dismiss the appeal filed by Douglass. Webber denied Granger's right to take such a motion, and claimed that he had no business to appear in the case. Some animated remarks followed from Granger. The Court finally ruled that Granger had no right to make the motion and dismissed the same.

THE horse of Walter Marston, of Thetford, was turned to the ground, on the 20th. Loss, $2,000.

A GAS explosion occurred in the East Saginaw M. E. Church, the other night. Rev. E. E. Caster was severely burned, and his two little daughters also. The younger will lose her eyesight, it is thought.

JAMES CRUMLEY, of the Town of Gaines in Kent County, was violently assaulted by Pantine Gotts and his son-in-law, on the 21st, and so severely injured that, at last accounts, it was believed he must die. It is said that he was punishing one of her brothers, a boy twelve or fourteen years old, when she flew at him in a terrible passion and struck him on the head with a sharp saw. Mr. Crumley is an old resident of the county, seventy years old, and only on the 17th celebrated with his wife the golden wedding. The granddaughter is about seventeen years old. She fled soon after the horrible deed, and was not arrested until the 23d. She is reported to be quite indifferent as to her crime.

THE S ate Insane Asylum Board met at Kalamazoo, on the night of the 15th, and consulted as to the best and most economical management of the Institution. The members present were L. H. Trask and W. H. Tomlinson, of Kalamazoo; Charles S. Mitchell, of Hillsdale; James A. Brown, M. D., of Detroit; W. H. Withington, of Jackson. Gov. Croswell and Atty-Gen. Kirchner were present by invitation. The conduct of the Asylum officials was examined and justified by the Board. All of the officers were retained, and the general management of the Asylum seems to have met the approbation of the committee.

THE coal-pits at Otis, near Flint, fell in, on the 21st, burying Jerry Simmons and Henry Bingham in the ruins. After much work the men were saved, in a suffocating condition. Gingham had a broken arm and Grimes a fractured shoulder and internal injuries, probably fatal.

An Eloquent Tribute.

"... There was a pause, and a solemn stillness pervaded the court-room when the venerable member of the bar arose to second the resolutions. He said: "The deceased was a remarkable personage in the ranks of professional jurisprudence. He was an old-liner, patient and steady as a clock, determined in opinion, ever ready to assume the cares and responsibilities of the occupation he had marked out for himself in life. Men are prone to falter and fall out of it, if they can, pleading business, sometimes the family, much information and prejudice in the case. But he never shirked. When duty called he was always there, and came up pure and unbiased as a dove.

"I doubt that we shall ever look upon his like again. Others may emulate his example, and, by great experience, devotion to duty and thorough development of talent, rise high in the profession, but who shall take the place of him whose loss we mourn? I know him long and well. We were friends. Much of my success in life and in planning at his bar I owe to him. He never forsook a friend, or a friend him. When I turn my eyes to that vacant and well-worn chair at the end of the court room, I can almost see him as of yore, so calm, so composed, so like a Judge himself upon the bench. Toward the last, in the infirmities of years, he may have slept a little at his post, and his hearing been pretty much gone, yet so vast was his experience and knowledge with the requirements of his office, that he discharged his duties without embarrassment, and in a manner to satisfy his own conscience and one side of the contending factions. What more could mortal furnish man do? He was not, you may say, a popular man with his colleagues. He had enemies, as every man of decided opinions has. Some were envious of his success. He was, moreover, a stickler. The bent of his mind was toward disagreement. He held his opinions as a steady hand, and either brought them round, or there was a dead-lock. He was a leader of juries or he went alone. Hence he became distrustful. More than once was his life imperiled in the jury-room, but he calmly looked death in the face, and hung on to the last. Once, on one occasion, a mob of eleven strong men attacked him and hauled him up to the ceiling several times to persuade him to submit, his unnecessary action did not flinch. And then, on another occasion, when a similar mob bucked and tackled him, he was found sitting quietly and drink for five long days, he was still for disagreement, and triumphed in the end. There, if it please the Court, was virtue of the old school. And all he asked was his per diem.

"You take a jury that has sat through a long case of, say, two or three weeks, and that goes out in the afternoon to consider the testimony. Before the dinner hour they bring in a verdict, and you may wager strong that they will agree, somehow, inside of a week. But when the deceased was sensing us, this was not a safe investment. He was wonderfully constructed physically and mentally for protracted hunting. In a row case involving $40, he held the jury nine days. One died of privation, and the other two got demoralized and had insane, but to be carried into the court-room. This, he frequently remarked, was the proudest effort of his life. Disagreement was the characteristic of his existence—in the 'Squire's office, during a long career as a Coroner's juror, and then, for half a century, in the higher walks of justice. He was born to be a juryman. It was his sole aim and end. And now that he is gone, I venture to say that, if opportunity presents, he will offer his services in a similar capacity in the upper courts."

Then the Judge ordered the resolutions spread upon the records, and the chair of the departed properly draped.

In 1787 a fellow named Kelly was sentenced to execution at Trim, in Ireland. On the early morning of the day intended to be his last he contrived to cut his blanket into strips about four inches wide, join them together with strong woolen threads, and make a double sling. This he passed under his limbs, fastened the ends at his neck, and there provided an iron bar, to receive the halter. Thus accoutered, he proceeded to the place of execution. It is supposed that he had found means to bribe the hangman, to whom he made a request to draw him up close to the pulley, and lower him gently when dead. But the crafty manoeuvre did not succeed. Kelly had not allowed for the stretching of the strips of blanket by his own weight, the point of the hook fastened into his windpipe, and gave him so much pain that he struggled violently. He was, however, allowed to hang until really dead, when his sling apparatus was discovered.—All the Year Round.

Two little souls, a boy and girl,
Wandering on to the feet of the hill;
Basins of green and blossoms of pearl
Lodged at the entries to the roadside rill.
Chorus: the June, a gorgeous lay,
Bathed in the light of a flattering sky,
Jauntily chatters, "Some day, some day!"

Two sweet souls, a man and a maid,
All[illegible] inches behind above;
Pacing the fitness woods spread a glade,
And bring their lush at a gone of love.
This one: "——Next year." What do they say?
And out of the beeches the cuckoo jay
Peeps and chuckles, "Some day, some day!"

Two old souls, and the end of the day
Refloats them home to the locked the hill;
One late plaint which the wandered satisfy
Breaks from a copse and dimples the rill.
Autumn leaves are strewing the way,
And lower from the larch the hungry jay
Shouts out to the night, "Some day, some day!"

Two poor souls at the door of the night,
Side by side he suffered and still;
And the wan[illegible] moon just softens her light,
As it sinks on the[illegible] feet of the hill.
Beckoning the bees and the buds and the day,
The[illegible]
The summer gold and the autumn gray,
And the warm green[illegible]
Sing on[illegible] "Some day, some day!"

A FIGHT WITH HORNETS.

We had two terrible bugbears to brave that season, and they were by no means imaginary ones.

There were six, including myself, who would go to school [illegible] on that road; Al Cummings and Rike, Elsie Hanley and Hitty Ball, and a boy named Sip Marsaw. None of us were more than ten years old, except Hitty Ball, who may have been eleven or twelve.

In the country, especially in backwoods districts, boys are not generally allowed to go to school in the summer after they are ten or eleven years old. There is always too much hoeing and haying to be done on their father's farms.

It was nearly a mile down to the red school-house which stood at the "Corners." The road ran along the side of a long ridge of pasture land with a rail pole and brush fences, which were rather low and poor, and bushes grew plentifully all along the line.

It was a road but little traveled. We would often scare up partridges between the very wheel-ruts, or see hares sendding across it. It was a wonderful place for blue-jays. In the summer, now that we never passed without seeing a nest of young ones, there were robins, too, were abundant—strawberries in June, and in July and August, raspberries and blackberries by the bushel.

Ah, those were pleasant times—before the days of school, worrying, bird's-nesting and chasing the red squirrels along the fences—our would have been but for the bugbears.

The first and worst of those was "Dagon," the second an enormous nest of great black-headed hornets that are so common in New England. This nest hung from a low branch of a small white ash tree, one of a clump which stood just inside the pasture fence, two or three rods from the road.

When we first saw it in June, it was not larger than a square loaf, but it grew and grew, till by the first of August it would have filled a ten-quart basket, and consisted of those great, savage insects would swarm out at the least provocation, even at the sound of our voices. Young fellows passing had thrown stones and sticks at the nest, and made the hornets irritable, and, indeed, we boys had frequently stoned it.

First Rike, then Elsie, had been stung as we passed. The hornets would dart at us like bullets. If we came within a hundred feet of their house, we were almost sure to hear a quick, vengeful buzz, and feel the long, poisonous stings of these worst of all hornets.

Both Rike and Elsie were stung near the left ear. With an air that fairly fanned the air, and one side of the contending factions. What more could mortal furnish man do? He was not, you may say, a popular man with his colleagues. He had enemies, as every man of decided opinions has. Some were envious of his success. He was, moreover, a stickler. The bent of his mind was toward disagreement. He held his opinions as a steady hand, and either brought them round, or there was a dead-lock. He was a leader of juries or he went alone. And then, on another occasion, when a similar mob bucked and tackled him, he was found sitting quietly and drink for five long days, he was still for disagreement, and triumphed in the end. There, if it please the Court, was virtue of the old school. And all he asked was his per diem.

"You take a jury that has sat through a long case of, say, two or three weeks, and that goes out in the afternoon to consider the testimony. Before the dinner hour they bring in a verdict, and you may wager strong that they will agree, somehow, inside of a week. But when the deceased was sensing us, this was not a safe investment. He was wonderfully constructed physically and mentally for protracted hunting. In a row case involving $40, he held the jury nine days. One died of privation, and the other two got demoralized and had insane, but to be carried into the court-room. This, he frequently remarked, was the proudest effort of his life. Disagreement was the characteristic of his existence—in the 'Squire's office, during a long career as a Coroner's juror, and then, for half a century, in the higher walks of justice. He was born to be a juryman. It was his sole aim and end. And now that he is gone, I venture to say that, if opportunity presents, he will offer his services in a similar capacity in the upper courts."

Then the Judge ordered the resolutions spread upon the records, and the chair of the departed properly draped.

Of course we complained at home. Something was said a number of times to Mr. Daniels about the danger of letting so vicious an animal run at large. But none of our folk liked to have trouble with the old man, who was known to be crabbed and revengeful.

As the season advanced, Dagon grew more and more aggressive and noisy. If he saw us passing, he would come to the fence and follow along inside it as we scudded in the road; and if he found a place low enough, over he would leap with a roar.

Then we had to scramble over the fence on the lower side of the road, in a hurry. It was a wonder he did not sometimes overhaul us, for the fence was made of brush, and we often stuck in it.

One morning Elsie had a particularly narrow escape. Dagon was in the road. Some larger fence, probably, stood and enraged him. We came upon him suddenly in a clump of sumac by the brookside.

"Oh, Dagon! There's Dagon!" Hitty cried, for she had first discovered him.

We turned and fled back up the road. But the bull had seen us and followed, with a fierce snort.

In his terror, Elsie, incumbered with her books and basket, fell and got behind the rest of us, who were already climbing the fence.

As we tumbled over we saw, to our horror, that the infuriated animal was close upon her. Screaming with affright, she jumped down over a great rick of old logs on the lower side of the road. Dagon, not daring to leap upon so uncertain a foothold, stood and looked down upon her, pawing the ground and giving vent to a queer, whistling bellow.

Elsie, crouching between the pile of logs and the fence, durst not stir till Rike and Sip, standing along on the lower side of the fence, pulled away the bottom brush and dragged her, bruised by the poles, into the field below.

We dared not go back after her basket and books, which Dagon kept trampled under his feet. The poor child could scarcely get over her fright for the rest of the day, and was very much provoked at us for not having rescued her books.

Dagon grew more and more savage, and finally, in the light of flattering accounts of the eighteenth century—large, covering nearly the whole face of the coin, with waving hair, the cap set low behind, with no fool's-cap peak or unseemly stiffness, and with a loose, graceful garland of wheat and fruits. She is a severe-looking female, with a severe jaw. Above her head is "E Pluribus Unum." In a semi-circle around the edge of the coin, and below—"1878" and the stars of the thirteen original States. The reverse of the coin bears, in the middle, the eagle, standing erect, with the head turned to one side, the wings stretched upward to the upper edges of the coin, and grasping in his right talon the palm-leaf—emblem of peace—and in the left, the arrows—symbols of war. Above his head, extending in a straight line from one wing to the other, is the motto "In God We Trust." In small but distinct old English print; around the whole is a laurel inlined with ribbons at the center and surrounding upward parts is a round wreath of wheat, and at the edge of the coin. The upper edge bears the words "United States of America," the lower the figures "One Dollar." The rim of the coin appears somewhat thicker than the center and is milled. The whole quality of the coin is not as fine as on the gold dollar. The eagle on the trade dollar is a better looking bird than the daddies' eagle.—Chicago Journal.

The Zuni Indians.

A Arizona correspondent writes: The Zuni Indians are located in New Mexico, a few miles east of the Arizona line. They are an industrious, economical people; are kind and hospitable to strangers, live almost wholly within themselves, raise cattle and sheep, weave blankets and cloth for their own clothing. They live in four-story buildings, the entrance being in the top story, which they enter by means of ladders which they take up after them at night, and then consider themselves secure from enemies without, and, so far as the rude implements of war the Indians use are concerned, are undoubtedly correct. These Indians have no traditions of the past that connect them with the ancient people who once densely populated this Territory, but from their mode of living, the architecture of their buildings, etc., they are undoubtedly the last remnant of that great people who had large towns and cities and who carried on extensive agricultural enterprises. Some distance from this Zuni Village, on the Arizona side of the line, is a salt lake, and all around the lake the brine has evaporated, leaving vast deposits of beautiful white and chemically pure salt. To this inexhaustible fountain the Zunis have gone for their salt for a period so far back in the misty past that the whitest Zuni has no knowledge of the date of commencement, but probably many centuries before our ancestors landed from the Mayflower on this continent, or even long before Columbus discovered that there was such a country, the dusky Zuni maiden and her begeckled squirrel hitcher to this bountiful source of supply, and, in peace and security, gathered what necessity required. Time rolled on and the pale-faces came and settled near, and were shown this wonderful deposit and were invited to share its fruits with their dusky brethren. A few years ago, one more avaricious than the rest, concluded to locate and make it his own private property, to settle there and become a toll-gatherer. In vain the Zunis reasoned with him that they had for centuries enjoyed the free use of this lake; that, by priority of discovery, occupation and use they were the rightful owners, and if anyone could make a monopoly of its use they were the proper parties, but that they did not seek for advantages of this kind, but did argue, in the most solemn manner, that it be left free for all to go and partake of at pleasure. The new comer laughed at his fool's hand right to it; that it was his own property; that he intended to hold and enjoy it for his own use and advantage. It was not long after this that the cabin was found abandoned; his things, such as gun, ammunition, provisions and blankets were undisturbed, but he was never been heard of since. Whether he became disgusted with his own illiberality and wandered away to parts unknown, or whether the Zunis sent him on a voyage of discovery, is not known. But no one has since had any desire to monopolize this salesinine, and people of all nationalities, creeds and tongues go there in harmony and gather what salt they want, and the Zuni and the civilized world to come and partake with them, as they claim there is enough for all.

—Mr. Caleb Cushing has received a fee of more than $100,000 for recovering the estate of a Cuban which was seized by the Spanish Government, and another claim for $2,000,000 has been made, which, if successful, will make Mr. Cushing a very rich man.

—Ex-Senator Wade had some queer kinks in his mind. He was a firm believer in Spiritualism, and looked to death as a mere change of scenes. Another striking peculiarity was the dread he entertained of sitting for a picture. He used to say often that he had as much respect for a dentist's office as he did for a photographic gallery.

He entered his profession in 1819, at an unusually early age.

—Mr. Sherman's new bust of the late Senator Morgan was copied from photographs, as a young sculptor of Indianapolis, who took a cast of the Senator's face after death, refused the use of it except on payment of $2,000. The Superior Court being in session, her father rode to Hartford on horseback daily, and returned at night, the traveling being as good as in the summer time. There was no sleighing throughout the winter, but after the 4th of March there was good sleighing for three weeks.

A DOZEN years ago a father and his son-in-law made a partial payment on a seventy-five-acre farm in Niagara County, New York, the price of which was $150 per acre. At the end of nine years the field was exhausted, two families having meanwhile had good support. They then bought seventy-five acres more at the same price. Two of the crop of 1877 was 1,000 bushels of white wheat from twenty-six acres. The Chatham Courier mentions, as a prominent cause of their success, that "they have not sold a pound of hay or straw; all of it has been converted into manure and taken back to the land."

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, April 5, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

In the course of the prolonged discussion in the legislature over various and windy plans for decreasing drunkenness, a bill was under discussion a few days ago, making it a misdemeanor for saloon keepers to sell liquor to a certain class of persons. Before the vote, one assemblyman got up and made a vigorous speech in favor of "pure whiskey" and liquors generally, and protesting against their wholesale condemnation by the temperance people. Reading the report of these proceedings set me to thinking about the "pure" liquors which this rural law-maker so eloquently defended; and I soon recalled a few pertinent facts elicited by a general examination of drinks made in this city last winter, and which perhaps failed to come under the eye of this innocent and elbow-crooking legislator.

In the first place, the foundation fact established by the investigation referred to is, that there is almost no such thing, commercially speaking, as pure wine or liquor; so, that the question, from the very outset, is, practically, as to how much any specific tipple is doctored. The existence of this state of things I supposed to be to generally known to be commented upon; but if a man, and an acknowledged drinker into the bargain can get into the legislature of this state, knowing as little of the facts as the gentleman above named seems to, it is probable that the following brief statement may find an occasional interested reader:

The four kinds of liquor sold in New York saloons are rum, whiskey, brandy and gin, or at least they go by these names, though perhaps they are not the same liquors as were originally so described. Rum was originally made by fermenting and distilling molasses. Whiskey was made by fermenting and distilling on a small scale, either rye or wheat, or a mixture of the two. Brandy was made by distilling the wine of grapes, or by taking the pulp and skin of grapes, after the juice was expressed for making wine, and fermenting them or distilling. Gin was made by distilling alcohol through juniper berries. All these liquors are colorless when first made by these processes; they acquire color from being kept for long periods in barrels, and they acquire tannin from the oak of which the barrels are made.

So much for the old-fashioned genuine liquors; they were expensive to make and expensive to keep; they lost by evaporation, and, of course, lost their makers the interest of their money.

The modern liquor-dealers, according to the most trustworthy authorities, have changed all this, and have discovered a much cheaper and simpler way of carrying on the business, namely, to make all kinds of corn alcohol (the cheapest produced) flavoring it to imitate what they desire to sell. For example, a dealer wishes to get up an assortment of liquors. From some distiller or broker he buys fifty or a hundred barrels of highwines. To make his low grade whiskey he merely dilutes a portion of the stuff till it contains 45 per cent of alcohol, colors it with burnt sugar and it is ready for sale. For a better quality of whiskey, the highwine is partially purified, and beside the sugar for coloring, a careful selection from the class of compounds chemically known as ethers is added, since the discovery of which, the art of flavoring has been carried to unheard of perfection. How powerful these compounds are may be judged from the amount prescribed below in concocting brandy.

Rum is made by filtering the high wine and reducing it to the proper strength by water, flavoring it with butyric ether, pine apple ether, ect., adding burned sugar and a little molasses. To make gin, the filtered high wine is diluted to the proper strength, flavored with the essential oil of juniper and sweetened with white sugar or rock candy.

Brandy making is a little self simple. A purer alcohol has to be used, called Cologne Spirits. Here is an approved recipe: "To forty gallons of cologne spirits double distilled and free from odor, and reduced to proof with distilled water add one sixteenth of an ounce on 'cognac oil,' one and a half pints of burnet sugar coloring, and one quarter ounce of tannin." This artistic combination results in one barrel of "Best French Brandy," to be afterwards bottled, handsomely labeled in French, called ten, fifteen, or twenty years old, and sold over the bars of hotels and first class saloons at thirty or forty cents a glass. The imitation is really very good when skilfully prepared, and lacks not even the peculiar flavor which is supposed to be derived from age in the barrel, but which is really supplied by the tannin.

All the above processes are those used by the best of the liquor manufacturing class. By the less scrupulous—if there can be said to be any grades of rascality in this business—some most hurtful drugs, and even active poisons, are used, to give their villainous stuff the required strength.

The same practice extends to the fabrication of "imported" wines. I am told that at the death of a prominent wine importer of this city some three years ago, a careful examination of his books failed to discover a single invoice of wine, but that in his cellar was found all the machinery and material for making it in any quantity desired. One small phial holding a dark liquid, was guaranteed to make twenty gallons of "pure Port wine,"—which I believe is extensively prescribed by physicians for the use of invalids.

From what has been said above some idea may be got of the extent to which fraud in alcoholic beverages is carried on here. Nor are these the only articles of consumption which are grossly adulterated. Quite an interesting chapter might be written about the sophistication of drugs, spices, groceries, textiles, &c., but these subjects must be reserved for another occasion.

In the news record of the past week their appears very little of general interest. A smart reminder that winter has not yet taken his final departure has been vouchsafed us in the shape of a wind that ran our aspiring thermometer down to eighteen, and put a damper on tree buds, beside fanning the flames of a small fire that broke out Monday night on Canal street, near Broadway, till they had wiped out property to the value of half a million of those dollars which are so scarce and hard to get one's hands on, these days.

Mr. Tweed has been once more brought to the front by being taken into court to testify in a city suit, and, instead of doing so, asserting that the authorities had broken faith with him by keeping him in jail after getting his full confession, and that he didn't propose to testify a cent's worth till he was released according to contract. Supporting Tweed's position in the matter, Comptroller Kelly has written a letter to the Attorney General, protesting against Tweed's further detention, and demanding his immediate discharge.

Mr. Tweed's feelings seem to be just the reverse of those of one Campbell who at this writing is in great distress because he can't get into prison. This odd character is a painter by trade, who, about six months ago, was committed to the Tombs for intoxication. Before his ten days were up Campbell had become so enamored of his new residence that he determined to stay in it. By failing to answer to his name of discharge, he managed to remain a month; when he was found out and dismissed. Then he got himself committed as a vagrant and served another term. Trying the same dodge again the judge recognized him and wouldn't send him up so he was forced to resort to the plan of crawling under the prison van and being taken in that way. Now he has been turned out for the third time and is very unhappy.

State Senator John Morrissey is back after his long sickness in Florida. He says he feels well but weak and will probably not take his seat in the Senate this session.

RADIX.

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Bronchiages, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10cs; regular size, 75c.

"German Syrup"

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist, and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

HOW THE PHONOGRAPH WORKS.

A representative of the Graphic yesterday interviewed Edison's marvelous new invention—the phonograph—at the telephone headquarters, Tribune Building. It belongs to the same family of implements as the telephone, though its construction and operation are of course altogether different.

In charge of the room were C. A. Cheever and Mr. Applebaugh—Mr. Edison being at his New Jersey laboratory. Gen. William F. Smith, Police Commissioner, Mr. Merritt, Surveyor of the Port, and Mr. Conant, of Harper's Weekly, came in during the exhibition, and exhibited frank astonishment at the wonderful invention.

The instrument is small, not half as large as a sewing-machine, and it is as simple as a grindstone. Any artisan in iron can easily make one. There is no electricity, magnetism or other force about it, except the gentle force used to turn the crank which causes the cylinder to revolve under the needle. A thin diaphragm, made of terrotype (such as daguerreotypes are sometimes taken on), is inserted into a small mouthpiece. Under it, projecting downward, the point of a cambric needle is arranged, so that it will pierce whatever it touches, when moved by the vibrations of the diaphragm. The largest part of the machine is a brass cylinder about eight inches long and three inches in diameter, fixed to an iron shaft two feet long, which is turned by the crank before alluded to. The surface of this cylinder is finely grooved with a spiral thread running through the entire length, the threads lying close together, fifteen to the inch. Around this, when talking is to be done, a sheet of tin foil is closely wrapped, and on this soft and impressionable tablet the voice makes its record. The manufacture is so adjusted that, when the crank is turned, the point of a needle follows the spiral, pressing the foil down into the grooves and making on it a line of sharp but scarcely visible indentations, which are supposed to be an accurate photograph of sound waves. The cylinder makes about one revolution to a word; that is, the needle imprints these minute marks on the foil clear around the cylinder, during the quick utterance of an ordinary word of consonants and vowels. These indentations are found to be of different distances apart, and scientific analysis will probably reveal a rhythmical arrangement corresponding to the difference between the sounds themselves.

When our representative entered the room, Mr. Applebaugh was singing in a loud, clear voice into the mouthpiece, while he quickly turned the crank. He sang:

There was an old darkey an' his name was Uncle Ned,
He died long ago, long ago;
There was a wool on the top of his head
Cook-a-doodle-doodle-doo!

The performance was greeted with applause. The lines were read back and repeated accurately. The inflections, modulations, timbre of voice, pauses between words and the very breath all had been exactly reproduced.

Then Mr. Applebaugh barked into the mouthpiece, sang, sneezed, coughed, mewed, cackled, whinnied, and the sounds came back unmistakably, whenever the needle was replaced on the spiral tube. Sometimes the same thing was repeated three or four times, to show that the number of repetitions was endless, and the operator took from the cabinet a sheet of last week's talk, subjected it, and we heard come from the mouthpiece:

"Hello! You Ephraim! Come right in off'n dat wet grass; you ketch you def cold!"

And then, in a thin, childish voice:

"Yes, mammy! I'se a comin. Yah-yah! Cock-a-doodle-doo!"

At this point Mr. Cheever took the instrument and shouted into the mouthpiece:

"Bow-wow-wow! Mary had a little lamb, its fleece was white as snow! Try to, or not to be; that is the question! Break, break, break, break on the cold gray stones, O sea! I would that my tongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me. Cutteren't-cretter! Catchem! Bell Telephone Company, No. 32 Tribune Building, beware of Western Union infringements!"

He lifted the mouthpiece and needle and turned back the crank till the needle was over the point of beginning on the foil spiral, and then (after a little conversation and the admission of another spectator) he let the needle fall into the series of dots, and from the mouthpiece came, more accurately than any human mimic could repeat it after the practice of a lifetime, the same words, ejaculations, bow-wows and injunctions, rendered extremely comical by the mock-tragic manner in which they had been delivered.

Mr. Cheever shouted into the mouthpiece, and, turning back the cylinder, the mouthpiece situated in a metallic falsetto, but with good articulation:

"How are you, Graphic—only illustrated daily in the world?"

Then he lifted up the needle, turned the crank back to the place of beginning, turned the crank again, the needle traversed the former groove, and out of the mouthpiece came, in a distinct, piping voice, but with very distinct articulation:

He shed long 'go' long ago;
There was a wool on the top of his head
Cock-a-doodle-doodle-doo!

Then he lifted up the needle, turned the crank back to the place of beginning, turned the crank again, the needle traversed the former groove, and out of the mouthpiece came, in a distinct, piping voice, but with very distinct articulation:

Then he took off the foil and gave it to the Graphic man, remarking that whenever that same sheet was laid on this or any other phonograph, it would reproduce the salutations with all the peculiarities of the original tones.

The possibilities of this machine are truly wonderful.

When it is developed, a great preacher can preach into it, and the sheets, duplicated to any number, can be sold cheaply, and when laid on another phonographic cylinder anywhere, another audience can hear the sermon in the exact voice of the preacher.

A man can talk into it, and unborn generations a thousand years hence can use the matrix and hear his very tones.

A great opera singer can sing into it, and the sheets can be sold like sheet music, and listeners on distant continents or in future centuries can hear her sing.

If Washington, or Napoleon, or Webster or Lincoln had spoken into a phonograph, his voice could now be distinctly heard.

A traveler in distant lands can talk to a phonograph, send the sheets home, and his friends can hear as much as was taken on), is inserted into a small mouthpiece. Normal Schools.

The first Normal School was founded in 1681 by the Abbe de la Salle, Canon of the cathedral at Reims, and, sixteen years later, a teachers' class was opened in connection with an orphan school at Halle, the pupil-teachers receiving two years' training under the head-master, August Hermann Francke, under whom the system developed surprisingly, and soon received the invaluable support of Frederick the Great. Other Normal Schools were opened in Hanover, Austria, Switzerland, France, Holland, Belgium and, about forty years ago, in Great Britain, where they have extended into nearly every civilized country. The class of the schools are well conveyed in the following extract of the Prussian law: "The directors of teachers' seminaries shall rather seek to combine the pupil-teachers by their own experience to simple and clear principles, than to give them theories for their guidance; and, with this aim in view, primary schools shall be joined to all teachers' seminaries where the pupil-teachers may be practiced in the art of teaching." There are now about 850 Normal Schools in Europe, the British Colonies and British India, the latter having 194.

Massachusetts was the first State in the American Union to establish Normal Schools, of which there now are 137, with over 22,000 pupils and over 1,000 instructors. Ohio and Pennsylvania each having twelve schools, while New York State has nine, Illinois and Missouri eight each, and Massachusetts seven. The largest number of pupils are in New York, however, where there are 4,158. The necessity of such schools needs no other enforcement than a few statistics relating to education in the United States. Nearly 9,000,000 scholars are enrolled in the public schools. Nearly 6,000,000 are in attendance daily, and about 231,000 teachers are employed, including 133,000 women. The amount expended annually upon this vast scheme, which seems almost fabulous, is about $82,000,000, and the imagination is carried away by the tremendous suggestiveness of the figures.—*Ill. An Elephant on an Engine.

It appears that a train was going out, driven by Mr. Stone, Locomotive Superintendent, assisted by Mr. Stewart, Locomotive Foreman, when, about the thirty-fifth mile from Rangoon, a large elephant was seen to break through the fence and get on the line. Steam was shut off, and Mr. Stone tried to open the whistle-cock, which, being in front of the engine, would, on ejecting hot water some distance ahead, indicate "tanks" to leave the track. The whistle-cock was slightly stiff and could not readily be opened, and the engine was soon upon the unfortunate beast. The brute had turned tail and died on seeing the engine, but was speedily caught. The buffer beams of the engine being very low, the beast's hind legs were taken from under him, and he was forced to sit down, as it were, with his hindquarters against the smoke-box door, which was, of course, red hot. The poor beast managed to keep his fore feet going, though hustled along faster than ever he had gone in his life before, and in a few minutes the train came to a standstill and he got away. He moved off the line at the double, uprooted a clump of bamboos, then wrecked dire vengeance on a tree, and was last seen rushing through the jungle, tearing and smashing over, thing in his path. He was sadly cut and bruised in the hindquarters, and will probably never be of use again. The mahout luckily escaped with his life, while those on the engine may safely congratulate themselves on their escape.—Rangoon Times.

"MA P." screamed young Matilda Spilkins, the other morning, when she got the paper, "Ma, silver Bill has just pass'd the House." "Has he, my dear?" replied Mrs. S. from up-stairs. "Why didn't you ask him in?"

HALF those Londoners don't believe there is any such word as "obelisk." They have searched the 19's in vain for it.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Mr. Robert, of Dougherty, Ga., lit his pipe in his carriage, the other day, and shortly after found the vehicle on fire. The whole concern was burned except the man, the iron and the running gear.

—An Ithacan (N. Y.) lady boarded a Cornell student in a Brazilian—until his board bill amounted to over $900. The student then left suddenly for his distant home, and the lady expected recovery to get the money due from him. Recently, however, she received a draft from the student's wealthy father for the full amount.

—A tramp entered Missoula, Wis., requested the Marshal to arrest him, take him to the calaboose and give him something to eat, or he would steal. The Marshal told him to steal, then; whereupon the tramp went to a store where a rack stood at a front door, loaded with dry goods, and made off with the rack, goods and all, and got away without being arrested.

—A Kiss in the Dark was played recently by amateurs in Mount Sterling, Ky., up to the point where the young man kisses the pretty girl. Then it was turned into a tragedy. The girl's real lover, jealous of her stage lover, and thinking that the kissing was too much relished, shot the offender on the spot. The wound was trifling, but it brought the performance to a close.

—The wildest excitement prevails among some of the citizens of Trigg County, Ky., over the appearance in the immediate coming of the day of final judgment. Many of them have abandoned all business, have turned their stock loose to range through the woods, and cutting themselves loose from the contemplation of earthly affairs, they go from house to house singing and praying for the eventful day.

—A three-ton iron roller lay at the top of a high hill in Eureka, Cal. A boy called his comrades' attention to the chance for fun in seeing it go down the long and heavy grade. They started it with considerable difficulty, and at the very outset it ran over a pile of slats and scattered them in splinters among the hills. Gaining speed as it whirled along, it soon overtook and flattened a dog. Next it smashed a wagon, from which a man jumped just in time to save his life; and then, quitting the road, it crashed through a Chinaman's shanty, and buried itself in a ravine.

—The gossips of the Baptist Church in the little Village of Hamilton Square, N. Y., are busied in the manufacture of scandal. The other Sunday, while the pastor, the Rev. W. W. Case, was preaching an earnest discourse, a quarrel lady arose excitedly in a pew in front of him, and shouted, "You're a liar! Better practice what you preach." There was intense excitement and the woman was denounced by the good people of the flock. A meeting was held, and the decision was that she must not be permitted to enter the church at the next service. On Sunday she attempted to force her way in, but the door was blocked by a Constable who threatened to send her to Jail. Her husband finally took her home and peace was restored.

How Soldiers Fear Death at Sea.

Soldiers die bravely on the battle field and resignedly in the military hospital on shore, but there is something very sad in the soldier's death at sea. The surroundings of the ship hospital are unfamiliar to his eye; the roll of the vessel is painful to him, and the thought is ever present to his mind that if he was on shore, if he could see the green fields or even the snow-clad earth, his recovery might be possible. Although nothing could be more comfortable than the couch on which he lies, and scarcely anything more soothing than the gentle roll of the ship, even in his condition, he longs to stretch his limbs on the barrack hospital bed and to feel that he is on the firm ground.

Then the thought of the lonely burial in the wide waste of waters dismays itself on his mind. The fate hovered over the vessel's side into the lonely ocean committed to the deep and left without a stone or a wooden cross to mark the spot where his mortal remains were consigned to their everlasting rest—all this is inexpressibly saddening to the dying soldier. On shore his comrades would have followed his remains to their resting place in the churchyard and fired a farewell shot over his grave, and with reluctant step would have left him to sleep the sleep that knows no waking till the trump of the archangel summons the dead to judgment.

How different at sea! Sewed up in a hammock the corpse to which he belongs summoned to the gangway-ship, a few short but solemn prayers said over the dead, and then the usual words:

"We commit this body to the deep!"

A plunge, and the corpse sinks into the sea; the flag is lowered; the vessel sails on, and the dead is left alone to the tossing of the sugary waves, or to sink deep into the coral caves of the ocean. No comrade may come in after days and drop a tear on that grave; no loving hand may plant a flower there; it is lost, swallowed up in the immensity of the great graveyard of the deep.

The writer has stood by the side of a dying comrade in the hospital of a troopship, and heard the dying utterance to such thoughts as the above.

"What does the surgeon say?" he asked. "Tell me the truth, comrade, I am not afraid of death."

"It is better that you should know the truth. He has no hope."

"I thought so. Well, God's will be done; but it is hard to die in the middle of the ocean. If I had been on shore, even in a foreign country, it would have been easier. It is hard to be buried at sea."

"The sea will give up its dead."

"Ay, that is right, comrade. I ought to think of that. Beamon, they say, like to cherish the thought that they will be buried at sea; but I am a soldier. I would die happier if I knew that I would be buried on shore and be followed to the grave by my comrades. There is something beautiful in a soldiers' funeral on shore. The solemn music—that Dead March in Saul—how I used to love it! My poor mother! It will grieve her to think that I was buried at sea. Read me that, comrade, about the sea giving up its dead."

The Chaplain at this moment approached, having been sent by the surgeon. He read the passage of Scripture asked for, and many other beautiful passages.

The dying soldier closed his eyes during the reading. He lay silent for a long time after the Chaplain had ceased. Then he opened his eyes and muttered, feebly:

"The funeral parade; no music; no farewell shot over my grave—committed to the deep. The sea—will—give up—its—dead. Comrade—my mother—farewell!"

And he ceased to live.

Next day the vessel came to a stop for a few minutes. The sailing-bell was tolled, the flag floated at half-mast, and the soldiers of the corps to which the deceased belonged were paraded at the gangway. The prayers were said, the body launched over the side, and the vessel resumed her course. Some of the members of the corps on board were surprised on learning, late that evening, that a soldier had been buried during the day.

It is better that such things should be so. Nothing can be gained by saddening the minds of the living soldier. On shore his comrades would have followed his remains to their resting place in the churchyard and fired a farewell shot over his grave, and with reluctant step would have left him to sleep the sleep that knows no waking till the trump of the archangel summons the dead to judgment.

Mules in the Mines.

The heat in the Sutro Tunnel for several thousand feet back from the face is very considerable, ranging from 95 to 100 degrees Fahrenheit, and feels all the hotter for being partly deprived of oxygen. At the face, where the men are at work, two streams of fresh air, generated at shaft No. 2, two miles away, and 1,042 feet above the tunnel level, are constantly discharged—one from the blower, the other from the compressor-pipe; and, though at this point it is 106 degrees Fahrenheit, the air is quite comfortable.

One switch-mule is employed on each shift, which is used for bringing a car at a time from the switch—a thousand feet back—to the face of the header; it is then taken back with the loaded car to bring another empty one forward, in which manner trains of fifteen or twenty cars are made up. This mule, from the time it is switched from the empty cars, and while it is waiting to be hitched up to the one being loaded, manages to put his nose up to the air-pipe, and keep moving its head up and down, in order to get all the air possible in the few minutes allowed it.

One day last week a man in charge of the switch-mule was seen coming out of the tunnel, in the middle of his shaft, and in hugrey wh he made his appearance at this unusual hour, he said he had to come out after another mule to do the watering, for his regular switch-mule was under the influence and utterly refused to do any duty. He declared the mule was standing in front of the air-pipe, near the face, and no amount of coaxing, whipping, or pulling could induce it to leave, and he was compelled to start out after another mule, in order to permit the work to proceed.

After a few hours, by sheer dint of force, the refractory mule was brought out, half a dozen men being required to pull and push it along. It has since been put to work on the outside, for it would be useless to take it to the working any more, for it would repeat the same performance at each shift.

The intelligence of mules is displayed in a remarkable degree when used underground and in dangerous places. They gradually learn to understand every command the driver gives them, and in the header when the signal "fire" is given, they instantly wheel around, with their backs against the blast. One day a mule neglected to wheel quite around, but stood at right angles with the tunnel, and through over 100 feet from the face, a rock four inches in diameter struck it in the side, making an ugly wound, from which the intestines protruded. He had to be thrown on a dat-car, taken out and shot.

A curious freak about mules is that when anything couples their heads they dodge; while touching horses' ears makes them shake their heads. For this reason horses cannot be used underground, for they would soon break their skulls, while mules never get injured in that manner.

The switchmules, when the men are eating, go from man to man begging something to eat, and they will eat cooked meat, pies, drink coffee—in fact, take anything the men have. One of the mules, when the men are not looking, will open the dinner-pails and help himself without leave. They have also taken to drinking lee-water, and are not satisfied except they get their regular allowance.

The mules which pull the rock-trains are driven three or four tandem, each having a torch upon its head, which keeps bobbing up and down as they move along, and they present a very novel appearance as seen from a distance in the darkness.

All the mules in the tunnel work eight-hour shifts, the same as the men. Notwithstanding this short duty, they rapidly wear out, and it is a pity to see them panting and blowing in the confined air, with perspiration streaming from them.

The mules have a cloth fastened to their bridle, and it is put over one eye before they emerge into daylight. This cloth is removed after they enter the tunnel on the return trip. The object is to have them reserve one good eye to see from, for the uncovered eye, exposed to daylight, is incapable of seeing anything for some time after entering darkness. Whenever it is neglected to bandage an eye on the outside, the mule staggers and tumbles about in the darkness, and refuses to go ahead.

The mules, of course, all have their names, and Jane, Nell, Luce, Fan, Tom, Lily, Jack, Frank, are sure to be amongst the list. One mule has been facetiously christened Susan B. Anthony. They are great favorites with the miners, especially when underground, and they answer the call of their names, like pet dogs; and, strange to say, in that heated atmosphere, they soon lose their proverbial tendency for kicking. The driver, who usually stands on a small platform in the rear of the first car, and, since he could not reach the mules, driven in tandem, with a whip, he shies small stones with the greatest dexterity, of which he has a good supply before him.

Two trains generally follow one behind the other, for should an accident happen from caves, breaking of rails, or of cars getting off the track, one driver assists the other in overcoming the difficulty.

The most durable mules are those with short legs, large bodies, compactly built, and weighing about 1000 pounds.

The Great Reputation

WHICH VEGETINE has attained in all parts of the country as a

and the large number of testimonials which are constantly being received from persons who have been restored to health by its use, are conclusive proof of its real value. It is entirely vegetable in its composition, and acts in the most harmonious manner on the various organs of the body. By purifying the blood it imparts new life and vigor to every part of the system. Are you troubled with Dyspepsia? Are you afflicted with Sick Headache? If so, VEGETINE will relieve you. Are you suffering from disease arising from a torpid liver? VEGETINE will restore it to healthy action, and in this way overcome the disease. Are you troubled with Scrofula? VEGETINE will eradicate the disease from the system, and thereby prevent the development of Tumors, Cancerous Humors, Erysipelas, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Are you troubled with Rheumatism? VEGETINE will relieve the system of the poisonous matter which causes the disease, and thereby cure you. Are you troubled with Kidney Complaint? VEGETINE will remove the cause of the disease, and restore the kidneys to healthy action. Are you troubled with Dizziness, Nervousness, Sleeplessness, Dull, Despondent Feelings? VEGETINE will impart tone to the nerves, and build up your system. Are you troubled with Costiveness? VEGETINE will regulate the bowels, and restore them to healthy action. Are you troubled with Worms? VEGETINE will expel them from the system. Are you troubled with Female Complaints? VEGETINE will restore you to perfect health. Are you troubled with Humors of any kind? VEGETINE will change the blood, and thereby cure the disease. Are you troubled with Catarrh? VEGETINE will cleanse the system of the foul matter which causes the disease, and thereby cure you. Are you troubled with Piles? VEGETINE will remove the cause of the disease, and thereby cure you. Are you troubled with Debility? VEGETINE will impart new life and vigor to the whole system. Are you troubled with Consumption? VEGETINE will relieve the lungs of the diseased matter, and thereby cure you. Are you troubled with Liver Complaint? VEGETINE will restore the liver to healthy action, and thereby cure you. Are you troubled with Erysipelas? VEGETINE will purify the blood, and thereby cure you. Are you troubled with Scrofula? AGRICULTURAL ITEMS.

Every intelligent boy on the farm should learn to graft. It is a very simple operation.

If you would have the sow do well with you, you must do well with her.

Farmers better not sell all their eggs under ean gouse this year—especially if that goose be called wheat.

The golden text is, "The world's best crop is tame grasses, and the best animal to utilize it is the cow."

Many pretended farmers go to town and smoke, spit and drink beer all day, and then go home and grunt about hard times.

Corbett said "soft hands are indicative of soft brains."

Limited means and gaudy pride have no business farming.

The old poets said that "before the temple of virtue"—meaning all excellence—"the gods have placed labor." Let everybody, without regard to age, sex, color or "previous condition," know that it is work alone that conquers.

In planting trees, recollect they are not a stake to be driven into the ground. Dig a hole, put dirt for the tree, and put in the bottom soil first, and spread the roots out carefully and equally, and place the loose, fine dirt under and among the roots with the hand. Fill up the hole and press it down gently with the foot, but do not stamp it down.

The National Live Stock Journal gives a variation of good advice in the following paragraph: Breeding for speed alone is, at best, an uncertain business; and when to this uncertainty we add the expenses of training, the chances of profits are so slight that we would advise any general farmer to engage in the business, either with trotting or running horses.

This is the season farmers should pay especial attention to their horses and their harness. Many a valuable animal hands are commencing on the farm. High-spirited horses (and this is the kind to own and work) are easily ruined by ignorant, careless or villainous men. The first ill-treatment to a noble horse should be cause sufficient and irrecreasable for a "hands' discharge."

The neglect of farmers to grow grapes would be astonishing, did we not consider the great amount of mystery that has been thrown around the training, pruning and culture generally by some writers. There is no reason why every farmer's family should not have all the grapes they can eat, and there is scarcely a town or village lot so small, but at least one vine may be grown.

Market Gardens.

"Of early grown crops, if one has a warm soil, radishes make one of the most profitable, and demanding little expense except the hunting, which is necessary only when you are sure of your crop and a sale for it. It usually finds large sale at a good price if very early, and is often raised as a stolen crop. Another advantage is the quick returns which the crop being raised and marketed in from forty to sixty days.

Onions, year in and year out, probably yield the most profit of any garden crop, but should never be undertaken in large amount at first, not even upon a small scale, for the ground is rank and woody. New ground one or two years cleaned first is especially favorable, and also that broken up with sharp sod, and burnt hatred of weeds, he is pretty sure of a crop.

A good soil and well tilled early pease are a good crop; but provision must be made to have an abundance of pickers whenever wanted. It is also desired from the ground to allow of picking cucumbers, late cabbage, late roasting ears of corn or turnips, and, by planting between the rows, late crops or melons or squash can be grown after them.

Early cabbage pay well when well tilled on very rich ground, but young beginners err in attempting at first to grow largely of early cabbage and late celery, two of the most difficult crops to grow and demanding the largest outlay and risk.

Early pease for lunching are usually in free demand and pay well, having no pests and safe for a late crop should they miss the early market. But the grower must remember they are bulky, and it takes a great many wagon-loads to realize $100.

Early potatoes if very early market sure of a demand, and one of our surest crops. Economically managed, it always yields a fair profit, and often a very large one. Mulching with manure to be plowed under for the second crop insures a good yield, and, being all available for the other crop, really costs the potatoes nothing.

Sweet corn usually pays well if brought into the market very early or very late, but it is so easily raised that in the season the glut drives the price to a low figure. But it is a profitable hog and stock feed even while green, feed stalks and all, so there need never be any loss upon it.

Melons upon a sandy soil in good heart, if protected from their many pests, "can't help but pay," and the demand grows with the supply till we can almost say that no market has for any length of time been glutted with them. But "eternal vigilance is the price" of melons.

Winter squash, especially Hubbard, have become such a staple in the market that a large demand is always certain, and the grower of a large crop rarely fails to realize well. Failures are often due to insufficient fertility, but more frequently, by neglect, the bugs are allowed to destroy them.

Tomatoes, if one likes of life, and loyally yield at least a fair crop, whether the season be a continuous drought or one protracted rain. Often it is imperfectly marketed, and the market drives every few. But it has become such a standard fruit for immediate table use and for canning that, with tact in marketing or by canning all surplus, a fair price ought to be maintained.

Annually market several hundred bushels, but never have sold a bushel for less than seventy-five cents, and more usually have obtained one dollar. On the wagon, ready for market, I do not think they cost me more than thirty cents at the highest.

The root crops, beets, carrots, parsnips and rutabagas grown upon clayey loam, pay well in most markets; but the important items of expense are their culture and harvesting, and the most economic methods must be studied.—Rural's Memoirs.

The Proper Way to Work a Horse.

There never was a greater mistake made than to suppose that he who owns a horse, and drives a horse, knows all about a horse; for, in a majority of cases, it is the very reverse. There are two classes of horses—work and pleasure; and all horses who do pulling and hauling heavy loads are termed workhorses, and the colts are horses of pleasure. It need only be said of working horses, that they should be well cleaned and fed, have their regular hours of rest and plenty of time, before their work commences, to digest their food. It is a mistake to say that horses having a long journey to go, are benefited by being driven slowly; for if the road be good, the weather not too warm, and the load not very heavy, it will be better to drive him at the rate of eight miles an hour than five miles an hour, for the speed gives to his stable manner, be fed earlier and have a longer rest for the trials of to-morrow.

Of course, the work of farm-horses is generally slow, and they do not need the same attention as fast-working horses, and can be fed and watered at almost any time; but with horses of pleasure, everything is different, for, as a rule, they are in the stable three-fourths of the time, and should never be taken out or driven till the stomach, which there is never any necessity for; for if the stable-man is spurised of their going out, he can do the feeding-time to suit the convenences of the horses. When harnessed, and the driver seated, the animal must not have nothing with a jerk, or strike them with a whip, but by speaking to them kindly; allow them to increase their speed by degrees, but never force it.

A steady pace, say ten mile an hour, is more preferable than the slowest trot. Going up hills and steep places, less pushing a horse gets, the better for all parties; although it is true, that a lazy horse along with a free one, must be kept up to his work; or some of the latter will be "played out" before half the trip is ended; and in this case, the whip must be used; but in this case, the whip must be used gently, and in this case, the whip will be "played out" before half the trip is ended; and in this case, the whip will be "played out" before half the trip is ended; and in this case, the whip will be "played out" before half the trip is ended; and in this case, the whip will be "played out" before half the trip is ended; and in this case, the whip will be "played out" before half the trip is

SOUTH ARM, April 3.

FRIEND STARKEY:

Having understood that certain parties from this neighborhood, who are neither Methodists nor Baptists, have circulated malicious reports concerning said churches not having brotherly love for each other, we are very happy to announce that such feelings do not exist in our midst, and that each denomination does its share toward promoting a spirit of union, meeting together at their respective places of worship, which are equally attended by members of both churches.

On the evening of March 15, both societies united in a supper and festival for the benefit of the Baptist church, which passed off very pleasantly indeed.

On the evening of the 28th they again put at a "pound social" for the benefit of Rev. Mr. Hackett (Methodist) it was held in the Baptist church, and was largely attended, nearly every one furnishing something for the evening's entertainment, which consisted of select readings, recitations, singing, etc.

Trusting this may put all doubt regarding the unity of these two churches at rest, we subscribe ourselves,

Respectfully yours,

[Signed by eight members of each denomination.]

Italy will observe strict neutrality in case of an Anglo-Russian war, but its full weight of her moral suasion will be thrown on the side of England, and to oppose any augmentation of Russian power in Europe.

The official designation of the new silver coin is "standard silver dollars." They are shipped from the mint in kegs, each keg containing five bags, and each bag $1,000.

Both the Russian and English governments are steadily making belligerent preparations, and the latest phase of the Eastern complication is indicative that war between those nations is far from improbable. Perhaps the most noticeable activity is in the construction of torpedoes and torpedo boats, for which large orders are being filled for both England and Russia. Should an Anglo Russian war really occur, it would be a sanguinary one.

EX rebels control the action of one House of Congress completely, and there seems to be a strong prospect that they will soon be equally potent in the other House. A strong tendency in the same direction is apparent at the Executive Mansion. It remains to be seen whether the people will give their Inclorsement to the notion of rewarding the rebels by maintaining Democratic ascendancy in the Forty-sixth Congress, and electing a Democrat to the Presidency in 1880. It will cost the productive industry, trade and property of the county of the North only from $300,000,000 to $999,000,000, or perhaps $800,000,000, if that be done. Is the North prepared to assume such a burden for the sole purposes of rewarding the men who so saddled us with the existing national debt.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers its health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle a perfect Invigorator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world was a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease that is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

MARINE.—The scow Owen took a cargo of lumber to Milwaukee Friday for John Nicholls. The schooner Odio left Sunday for Chicago with a cargo of wood for A. Fox. The scow Ida Boone leaves as we go to press with a cargo of wood and posts for Olds & Stroud, and the consumer Rattled at same time with wood for Sol. Insman. The schooner Minnie Mueller is loading with posts at head of Pine Lake.

—The first boat up from Buffalo for Charlevoix was the propeller Fountain City, which arrived late Sunday night. This popular boat is greatly improved in appearance and seaworthiness, and is again as good as new.

—The propeller Menominee is doing well on her new route, and has already established a good reputation in all that goes to make a first class passenger steamer.

—The tug St. Mary, which was stationed at Charlevoix as part of last season, sank at her dock at Manistee on the 6 h. It is surmised that some one bounded the craft after dark and opened her seacock. The tug is owned by Mr. M. Engelman, he having purchased her recently under a mortgage foreclosure for $2,000. For several days previous to the mishap she was engaged in dredging a channel through the bar at the entrance to the harbor.

—The little propeller Mary of Milwaukee is running between Cheboygan and Mackinac.

—The Captain of the schooner Radical has prayers aboard his schooner every night and morning.

—Capt. Thomas Doherty, formerly of the schooner Purington, is sailing a large lumber vessel between Chicago and the east shore.

—The schooner W. A. Smith has been chartered again by Old Mission parties, for another cargo of potatoes for Chicago.

SPRINGVALE ELECTION.—Supervisor, W. C. Niles; Clerk, N. Therry; Treasurer J. L. Beigle; Com. of Highways, D. A. Bixby; Supt. of Schools, S. B. Thatcher; Justices, J Howard, N Small, S. Lamson, Geo Snyder.

BARNS BURNED.—Three barns that were burned in the Township of South Arm during last week. J. H. Lanway's with contents, consisting of a wagon, 62 bushels of grain and other articles; W. H. Healey's with 50 bushels of wheat some hay, and other contents; and Mr. Twohorns, with contents. The fires originated from fires in the woods. The severe wind of last Wednesday also blew down the log barn of Mr McLean, of the same township.

SPRINGVALE.—Supervisor Niles, of Springvale, gives us the following facts concerning that Township. They have five school districts, with four school houses completed. They have 93 miles of highway laid out, some of it improved, and a highway fund of $430 on hand to carry on the improvement. They are out of debt as a Township, and have money ahead. There are many good farms in this Township known as railroad land, which are in market at from $4 to $6 per acre. We know of no better Township in which to locate than Springvale.

THE DRIVING PARK.—The Committee appointed to secure the ground for the Driving Park have concluded to dispose of their bargain with the Indian Wa-mug-gam co for 40 acres of his land south of this village, and purchase the 20 acre lot belonging to Mr Snyder, between this village and the Cemetery. It is all cleared, and is peculiarly adapted to the purpose, and can be secured for $500

We shall receive by Fountain City our spring stock of dry goods, notions, boots & shoes, etc.

HANNAH LAY & CO.—We call attention to the new advertisement of this popular Traverse City firm, on this page. They are two well known thoroughout this region to need commendation from us.

We can now supply everybody with boots and shoes. We have just received our spring stock of infant's shoes, girl's shoes, misses and ladies' shoes, as well as a large stock of mens' and boy's wear, in both boots and shoes

FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS.

We are in receipt of an anonymous communication from the Township of Wilson, on election matters, signed "Regis." We supposed everybody knew that newspapers cannot publish communications of this nature.

THAT NEW HOUSE.—The new residence of Hon. John Nicholls, in this village, the foundation of which is now being laid, is to consist of two wings of equal height. The main wing will be 16x40, with gable facing south, and ell-roofed by a bay window. The other wing of the building will be 22x24, with veranda facing south and coming out flush with front of main wing. The east or main part of the house will contain below a sitting room, dining room and kitchen, each room occupying the full width of that part of the house. In the west wing a parlor, bed room main corridor and stairway will occupy the ground floor. The upper floor will be cut up into six sleeping apartments, and the usual halls, closets, etc.

Nice summer styles prints at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

FIRE AT CADILLAC.—A fire at Cadillac on the 10th destroyed eight business buildings and ten dwellings. Two persons were lost in the flames, one of whom was Mrs. N. W. Blunt.

Custom made boots and shoes as good as the best at See & Washburn's.

BOY SMOTHERED TO DEATH.—A lad who had been skating all day being fearfully tired laid down on the floor near the store went to sleep and was forgotten by his parents. Alas, poor boy, the cook having left a batch of dough in a pan, it raised, filled the room and smothered the boy. The verdict of the coroner's jury was, "Smith's Saleratus."

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 26th, the bill to repeal the back-pay law was reported back from the Judiciary Committee, without recommendation. On motion of Mr. Sumner, the correspondence between the American and British Governments in regard to the appointment of DeGrase on the Halifax Commission was taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. In the House, the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and the Tariff bill from the Committee on Ways and Means, and the latter was, by a vote of 157 to 114, made the special order for April 4, after the morning hour. The Massachusetts contested-election case of Dana vs. Field was further discussed. Committee resolutions were adopted for printing 3,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture and 5,000 copies of the report of the Forestry Commission.

A BILL was introduced in the Senate, on the 27th, granting pensions to Indians who were in the service of the United States in the War of 1812, as scouts, guides or warriors. The House bill making appropriations for the Consular and Diplomatic Service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1879, was discussed and passed. The Pacific Railroad Sinking Fund bill was further debated. A bill to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases into the United States, passed in the House, makes provisions not disturbing the quarantine regulations of any State of the Union. Physicians are made agents of the National Quarantine service. Mr. Morrison moved to take the United-Section-and-Pacific Railroad bill (which is the only measure entitled to precedence) from the table, but the motion was defeated—32 to 153—Mr. Butler voting with the Republicans in the negative, and the following-named Democrats with the Republicans in the affirmative: Barnum, Bell, Bland, Bliss, Bright, Buffington, Burchard, Burrows, Cabell, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Chalmers, Clymer, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crittenden, Crounse, Darrall, Davis (Ala.), Davis (Va.), Dawes, Dibrell, Dickey, Dunnell, Eames, Eden, Ellis, Ellsworth, Errett, Evans, Farr, Field, Finley, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Garrison, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Hamilton, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatch, Hawley, Henderson, Herbert, Hill, Hooper, Houghton, Hunton, Jones (Ala.), Jones (Fla.), Jones (Va.), Kasson, Kelley, Kenna, Kimball, Knapp, Lamar, Landers, Lapham, Lawrence, Lewis, Lowe, Luttrell, Lynde, Manning, Martin, Martin, Maybury, McCook, McCrary, McDill, McGowan, McKenzie, McKinnon, McLaurin, McMahon, McMillan, Merriam, Metcalf, Miller, Mills, Money, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, Negley, Nelson, Nesmith, Norcross, Orr, Page, Paine, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Poland, Potter, Prescott, Price, Rainey, Ray, Reagan, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Robertson, Rogers, Ross, Sapp, Scales, Shelley, Sherwin, Singleton, Smith, Southard, Speer, Stanton, Stephens, Stone, Strait, Sumner, Taylor, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tillman, Tucker, Turner, Turney, Updegraff, Vance, Vaughan, Wait, Wallace, Warner, Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitthorne, Wilber, Williams (Del.), Williams (Ind.), Willis, Wilson, Wood, Woodward, Young and Mr. Speaker—153. The Senate bill to provide for the payment of claims reported allowed by the Commissioners of Claims, A bill was introduced and referred to promote the general use of the metric system. Bills on the private calendar were considered in Committee of the Whole. Adjourned to the 31st.

In the Senate, on the 1st, a bill was introduced and referred to levy a tax on liquors in the District of Columbia by the introduction of the Mollie McGuires. Bills were passed—appropriating $15,000 for filling up the low grounds south of the Capitol; to regulate the advertising of mail letting; and for other purposes. The Pacific Railroad Funding bill was further debated. Among the bills introduced in the House were the following: Directing the Secretary of the Treasury when the amount of coin and coin in the Treasury shall exceed $100,000,000, to redeem the present outstanding legal-tender notes, when presented in sums of $1,000 and upwards, to the end of fifty months; to prevent fraudulent contracts for carrying the mails; to prevent the introduction of the National currency by fraudulent bank-withdrawing legal-tender notes from circulation; to provide a more effective civil service in the United States. An evening session was held for debate only.

DOMESTIC.

THE Sixpenny Savings Bank of New York City suspended on the 27th. Liabilities, about $1,700,000; assets, about $1,600,000.

IT is said counterfeits of the new silver dollar are already afloat, at the East, and they are said to be almost a perfect fac simile of the genuine, only a little lighter in weight. The Chicago Tribune at the 27th says the first counterfeit of the new coin brought in to the official notice of the Government is very poor, as far as the color of the metal is concerned, but in other respects a good imitation of the genuine.

AT St. Albans, Vt., on the 28th, G. T. Sturtz, of Bath, Me., walked 103 miles in twenty hours, three minutes and fifty-two seconds.

THOMAS P. FISHER, a "Mollie Maguire," was hanged in Mauch Chunk (Pa.) jail, on the 28th ult., for being concerned in the murder of John Yorsh, a mine boss, at Summit Hill, Pa., on the evening of the 21st of March, 1876.

A PHILADELPHIA special to the New York Tribune of the 30th ult., says: J. B. Knight, Secretary of the Franklin Institute, and a well-known scientific engineer, had just investigated the Keely motor, and in a long report denounced it as a fraud and humbug, giving specifications among them that the so-called report was simply compressed air, and that probably not more pressure than 500 pounds to the square inch could be used. Keely was said to be angry at these conclusions, and the stockholders, who had spent $1,000,000, were astonished.

A WASHINGTON dispatch states that up to the close of last month 1,000,000 silver dollars had been coined, and arrangements had been completed by which the Philadelphia Mint would turn out 1,750,000 of them during April.

A NEW trial has been denied to Sherry and Connolly, convicted in Chicago of the unprovoked murder of a peaceable citizen named McConville, who had resented insults proffered by them to his niece while walking on the street in that city. The two men have been sentenced to be hung on the 21st of June.

THE National House Committee on Banking and Currency had a long conference with the Secretary of the United States Treasury, on the 1st. The Secretary reasserted the facts and arguments presented by him several days before to the Senate Finance Committee, in regard to statements of New York bankers, recently made to Messrs. Chittenden and Ewing, that it would be impossible for him to resume, because the bankers would form a pool and buy up all the gold. Secy. Sherman said it would be impossible for them to do this; he would have $40,000,000 in silver ready to issue in case any combination by the bankers should be attempted, and when they had exhausted this he did not think they would be in any condition to cause him any anxiety.

THE public-debt statement, as published on the 1st, indicates the following: Total debt, including interest, $2,232,026,775, $9,914,047,953. Cash in Treasury, $174,824,459. Debt, less cash in Treasury, $2,049,748,514. Decrease during March, $2,313,644. Decrease since June 30, 1877, $30,444,508.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

PRESIDENT HAYES, on the 26th, appointed ex-Congressman Schofield, of Pennsylvania, as Register of the Treasury, vice Allison, deceased. The Senate Finance Committee had agreed to report favorably the nomination of H. M. Reynolds, of Alabama, to be First Auditor of the Treasury.

IN the suit of the United States against Samuel J. Tilden for $160,000 delinquent income taxes, Judge Blatchford, Judge of the United States District Court for New York, decided, on the 26th, that defendant must submit to a jury trial on eleven of the twelve counts of the indictment.

THE Iowa Legislature adjourned sine die on the 30th. Among the bills passed was one restoring capital punishment in the State, which passed the Senate on the last day of the session.

THE Illinois State Convention of the Greenback, Social-party, met at Springfield, on the 25th, closed at Bloomington, and chosen permanent President. Gen. E. S. Isaacs, of Chicago, was nominated for State Treasurer, and Jr. A. H. Hall, of Kane County, for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The Toledo platform was indorsed, the resolutions adopted declaring it to be the exclusive function of the General Government to coin and create money and regulate its value; that the coinage of silver should be placed on the same footing as that of gold; that the public lands should be donated to actual settlers in limited quantities; that the government should, by general enactment, encourage the development of our agricultural, mineral, mechanical, manufacturing and commercial resources; in favor of reducing the number of hours of daily toil; demanding the immediate passage of a full legislative inquiry currency by the Government to the full limit at least of $400,000,000 legal-tender United States Treasury notes, etc., etc.

THE Pennsylvania Republican State Convention is to be held at Harrisburg on the 15th of May.

EDWARD P. WESTON, now in England, has challenged O'Leary, the victor in the late international pedestrian contest, to walk with him six days for the sum of $2,500.

THE remains of the late John E. Leonard, Master of Congress from Louisiana, who died recently in Havana, Cuba, arrived at New York on the 29th.

A CINCINNATI dispatch of the 29th says: The friends of ex-Congressman Vance, who mysteriously disappeared a few days before, had abandoned the idea of foul play, and intimated that his disappearance was voluntary and caused by financial troubles.

JOSEPH FOULKS & SON, shipping and commission merchants, and Booth & Edgar, sugar refiners, New York City, suspended on the 1st. The liabilities of the former were estimated at $450,000, and of the latter at from $500,000 to $750,000.

MADAM RESTELL, the notorious female physician, of New York City, lately indicted for illegal and immoral practices, and out on bail awaiting trial, committed suicide, on the 1st, by cutting her throat with a carving knife.

ON the 1st, the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana rejected the petition of the Attorney-General for a rehearing in the case of Gen. Anderson of the Returning Board, and directed his immediate release from custody.

FOREIGN.

THE London Times and Telegraph of the 27th declare that all hope of the meeting of the Congress must be abandoned, and that the relations between Great Britain and Russia are inevitable. A Berlin telegram of the same date says Germany, in view of the difference between Great Britain and Russia, has declined to issue invitations for a Congress.

OSMAN PASHA, the hero of Plevna, has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Turkish Armies.

GEORGE BANNISTER, a grain merchant, at Retford, Eng., failed, on the 27th, with liabilities aggregating $1,500,000.

ON the 27th, an explosion occurred in the Oswall Colliery in North Staffordshire, Eng. There were thirty-five men in the pit, and it was believed that all had perished. Up to the morning of the 28th, five bodies had been recovered.

THE recent report of the death of the Emperor of Morocco is denied.

CARDINAL DI PIETRO has been appointed Secretary of Cameriengo.

ON the afternoon of the 28th, immediately after the assembling of the British House of Lords, Lord Derby announced that his resignation had been accepted, and that he held the office of Minister of Foreign Affairs only until his successor could be selected. He said the Cabinet had arrived at certain conclusions of a grave and important character in which he could not consent. Lord Beaconsfield, the Premier, said Her Majesty had been advised to call out the reserves, numbering almost 40,000 men, and that the proclamation would soon be submitted to Parliament.

A PAPAL Consistory was held at the Vatican, in Rome, on the 26th, and the Scottish Hierarchy definitively established. Right Rev. John Strain, D. D., was appointed Metropolitan Archbishop of St. Andrew's, at Edinburg; Charles Eyre, Archbishop of Glasgow; MacDonald, Bishop of Aberdeen; MacLachlan, Bishop of Galloway; MacDonald, Bishop of Argyle, and Rigg, Bishop of Dunkeld. For the United States, Father Chatard, was appointed Bishop of Vincennes, Ind., and Father Reuss, Bishop of Richmond, Va.

A CONSTANTINOPLE dispatch of the 26th says Safvet Pasha had requested England to withdraw her fleet, as Turkey and Russia were friends and allies.

THE Russians have issued a proclamation inviting the Mussulmans to return to their homes in Bulgaria, and warning the Bulgarians that they must preserve tranquillity.

ON the 29th ult., the British Minister to Constantinople notified the Turkish Government that the British fleet would not leave the Sea of Marmora so long as the Russians remained in the environs of Constantinople. Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Envoy, also notified the Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs that the Russians would not leave the environs of Constantinople so long as the British fleet remained in the Sea of Marmora.

A ROME (Italy) dispatch of the 29th ult. says the Pope was desirous of establishing diplomatic relations with Great Britain, and had taken steps to that end.

A ST. PETERSBURG telegram of the 29th ult. says that, Russian diplomacy having isolated England, Russia, in conjunction with the rest of Europe, would at once proceed to adjust pending differences without British aid.

RUSSIAN papers of the 29th ult. state that many advantageous offers for letters of marque, in case of an Anglo-Russian war, had been received from the United States and elsewhere, but that up to that time none had been accepted.

IT was semi-officially announced by the London papers, on the morning of the 30th ult., that Lord Salisbury would succeed Lord Derby in the British Cabinet.

ADVICES to Vienna dispatches of the 31st ult. say that, in case of an Anglo-Russian war, Servia would side with Russia. Gen. Markovetz has been arrested upon the charge of high treason.

A TURKISH force, estimated at 10,000, recently stormed the Greek insurgent position on Mount Pelion and captured Macrolitza. The losses on both sides were heavy.

ON the 1st, the Speaker of the House of Commons read the Queen's Message announcing her intention to call out the reserve. Discussion of the message was postponed for a week. In the House of Lords the Lord Chancellor read the message.

THE British Cabinet has sent a circular to the Powers defining the position of the British Government in relation to the existing condition of affairs.

A VIENNA dispatch of the 1st says the price of Austrian neutrality is stated, by Count Andrassy, to be the alteration of the boundaries of Bulgaria, and Austrian military and commercial supremacy in Servia, Montenegro, Bosnia, Herzegovina and Albania.

PERA dispatches of the 1st say the Russians were fortifying the lines of Chatalja, and constructing forts at all strategic points in the neighborhood. A Bookkeeper in Distress.

We met "Old Mose" the other day, and noticed that there was a dark cloud hovering over his prosperity.

"What is the matter, uncle?" we asked.

He shook his head as if he had nothing left to live for, and said:

"I'se in a peck of trouble. De Lord knows where dis hosh is gwine to end. I'se done gibin up."

"What is the trouble about?"

After several sighs that seemed to come up from the bottom of his boots, he explained that he was the Secretary of the local colored Lodge of Freemasons; that he was the custodian of the books; that for keeping the books he was paid by the Lodge an ordinary month; that every Saturday night, after the lodge was over, he carried the books home and returned them over to the "ole 'coman, Aunt Dinah," for safe keeping, and she stowed them away in her trunk, "along wid her 'bishal blowers, and fedders, and finery and slek." He also stated that he had forgotten to mention to Aunt Dinah that he was receiving ten dollars a month for keeping the books, and he had uniformly forgotten to turn over to her the aforesaid ten dollars, but had squandered the same for his own little personal expenses; that some unknown demon had informed Brudder Dud Ole Mose was getting ten dollars for keeping the books, and consequently when he remarked the other evening that it being time for him to go to the lodge, and upon requesting her to hand him out the books, instead of doing so she sat down on the trunk, and positively refused to turn over the documents until he paid over the ten dollars. When he told her the ten dollars were his'n for keeping the books, she retorted: "Who's been keepin' dem air books? Hasn't I been keepin' de books in de trunk all the time? Han' out dem funds wats comin' to me for keepin' de books."

"What did you tell her, Mose?"

"I tole her I wanted dem books to keep de minits in, dat she didn't know how to keep de books, but she 'lowed she was gwine to shain me ole Nick how to keep de books, and, shuh's you's a bawn, she is a keepin' 'em. De lodge has pinted a committee to investigate my accounts, and dar she is squattin' on de trunk lubbin' out her hair for de ten dollars I'se done spent. Doesn't yer know somebody who wants ten dollars wuff of whitewashin' done in advance?"

A NEW night-cap, Jacob Korns was assaulted on the streets of Detroit by eight roughs, and died, on the 27th, of the injuries then received. On the 28th, Augus Avery was arrested as one of the assailants, and confessed that he did the killing, but said he did it in self-defense.

THE balance of cash in the State Treasury March 16, 1878, was $981,472.94; receipts during the week ending March 23 were $94,747.29; amount received from Detroit and Michigan Old Fellows, and brought to Lansing, on the 24th, under arrest, upon the charge of embezzling $7,744.82 belonging to the Order. The statute limits the administration of the affairs, as Grand Treasurer, has been perfectly honest, and, although a discrepancy now appears, he is able to point out the cause from which it has arisen.

THE Common Council of Bay City recently appointed a committee to examine the accounts of ex-Treasurer Fleming, and the committee have found that Recorder J. G. Worden's account is from $1,800 to $2,000 short.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

A child was fatally poisoned in New York, a few days ago, by a Surrey Camp who administered the wrong medicine.

A young woman in Fond du Lac, Wis., declined to accompany to the altar the man she had promised to marry, because his pantaloons were not quite respectable. A quarrel ensued over the unmentionables, and the marriage was postponed. Both parties regret the occurrence now, as they cannot have the ceremony performed until after Lent.

—A negro man living near Bashi, Ala., was recently shot in a singular manner. He was acting as a wizard, and imagined that by certain evolutions, gesticulations or incantations he could surround his body with a magic armor that would be impregnable to shot or ball. Two young negro men and a white man fired a few shots at him without injury, when one of the negroes fired at him again and shot him down. He died in about a week.

—The Saginaw Valley Courier says: "About six weeks since, L. C. Boardman, of this place, was engaged by D. V. Benedict, of Buffalo, to disinter his wife, who was buried in the Cunoga Cemetery four years ago this month, and forward it to Buffalo for reinterment. The cattle were purchased in the operation, and the corpse was found to be as natural as when buried, and as hard and heavy as stone. The clothing had rotted and lay in folds upon the form, which was as white as marble. The deceased was a sister-in-law of Mr. Boardman, and he says the features were perfectly natural and full as when in life. The body had turned to stone, weighed 400 pounds. This is a genuine case of petrifaction, and no mistake."

—The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press says: "At Port Kent, the other day, one of the children of Horatio Burroughs broke through the ice. An older brother attempted the rescue, and he also broke in. The cries of the children brought the mother to the scene, and she also was precipitated through the ice. An aunt living in the family went to the assistance of the three struggling unfortunates, and in attempting to assist the mother in her predicament was pulled into the water. The cries of the four people brought the father to the scene, and in his excited state he ran to the house for the proper precautions, and was soon floundering in the water with the rest. Help came from further assistance arrived, and by means of ropes and planks the entire family were rescued from their perilous situation."

THOMAS HUMPHREYS was as brave an English sailor as ever furled a sail. He was crossing Carmarthen Bay, a few weeks ago, in the customs boat, with Mrs. Bydder (an officer's wife) and a companion, when a sudden gust of wind struck the sail, and they found themselves struggling in the water. He first endeavored to support his companion, who was an awkward swimmer, but the poor fellow could not be kept afloat, and then told the woman to cling to the boat, while he swam around it to see what could be done. He got his knife and cut it with his teeth, cut away the cordage, and, after considerable exertion, dismasted the craft and righted her, but as she was full of water, they could not get into her. He therefore placed the most nervous the boat, and got the woman's arms over it on one side and her waist and hung on at the other. Mrs. Bydder then said, "Every one for himself," and begged him to leave her and to save himself, which he could easily have done, being only about thirty yards from the shore, but he knew that if he left the woman she would be drowned. He remained by her, at the cost of his life, for an hour and a half, shouting all the time for assistance. Just as a boat reached them, the brave fellow sank from cold and exhaustion, but the woman was saved.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

IF SHE WERE HERE.

If only she were here, who knew
The secret paths of fields and woods,
And where in scented wildflowers through
Dead mosses push their dainty heads,
Whose voice was like a mother's call
To them and buds them waxe and die,
And mark the morning's splendors fall
In mists of pearl from tender skies.

If only she were here, to see
The landscape freshening hour by hour,
And watch in favorite pinat and tree
The first notes of a lusty bower,
To welcome back from sunny lands
The blossom that love turned long.
The light of her soul-loving hands
The height, red-bosomed prince of song—

If, brightening down the accustomed walk,
She came to welcome friend and guest,
To share our light, unclouded talk,
And sparkle at the rising jest;
Or, curled up in needful idleness,
In art and science play the sage,
And pay with such generous readiness
Foretell the wonders of the age—

Could she return, as now the spring
Returns to relieve the winter-spell,
When love and song are on the wing,
And heart and nature are as one!
How bright were all the days! how fair
The hedge-lined lanes and fields!
Whose lullings thrill the glowing air
And quicken over hill and sea,

And make the day pass by like love,
Spirit of light, because our eyes,
Veiled in their own delicious mist,
See not the heaven that near us lies?
More glory than the sun would shed
Within the shadow of the years,
Whose glimpses of a better land
Are caught through eyelids wet with tears.

And so in hope we wait and see
The springs return and summers go
That bring us nearer into the
Who set hearts no more we know
Whatever range thy flights may take,
In step thou surely will retrace—
Love binds with such Delft enamel break,
And draws like from the ocean of space.

JUST A FEW WORDS.

Just a few words, but they blended
The brightness and gloom of a day;
Just a few words, but they lifted
The shadow and cast them away.

Only a frown, but it chilled me
The sheen of a dear little heart;
Only a word, but it darkened
The eyes of tears that were ready to start.

Oh! that the subsoil our living
May be as the golden world be;
Much, oh, so much more of sunshine
Would ground from you and from me.

ALWAYS BEHINDHAND.

Supper was ready and waiting. Our guest had not arrived, but there was another train an hour later. Should the family wait for the friend, or should I adone, who was the perfumage of sociably to be visited? My father paced the floor nervously, as was his wont when he felt disturbed. He had seen the evening papers to read, and he never opened them until after tea. This was a habit of his. He was very fixed—or, as some say, set—in his habits and ways. It was Bridget's evening out, and she had begun to show a darkened visage. Bridget was a "help" and a "company," and it was policy to conciliate her. So the family seated themselves at the table, and I sat near, waiting until the bell should call the guest to accompany me a second time to the station.

"What about this young lady friend of yours, Nelly?" asked my father. "Is she one of the unreliable sort—a little addicted to tardiness, that is?"

"I am obliged to confess, papa, that at boarding-school, where I longest Miss Jenkinsites, she was inclined to be dilatory; but that was years ago. It is not fair, now, to visit her sins upon her head, because she has changed since then."

"I should wish to have very little to do with a behindhand person," said my father, shaking his head very gravely.

"Oh, papa!" I remonstrated, "you will not condemn a dear friend for one single fault. Jeannette is beautiful and accomplished, sensible and good-tempered. Everybody thinks she is splendid."

"She may have very pleasant qualities, but I tell you, girls," he added with sudden impulse, "that a want of punctuality vitiates the whole character. No one is good for much who cannot be depended upon; and what dependence is to be placed on a man who is not up to his engagements? Indirectness, such a man is responsible for, and the bookings of her skirt, not to be dispensed with. Horses could not be made to do the work of five minutes in three.

"So saw the cars move off without her!

No words were called for. My mother sighed as she offered my wine to the poor girl, and left her alone to her tears. They would do her good.

We ourselves needed rest, after the troubled scene of hurry and excitement, and we sat down, feeling as if a whirlwind had passed.

"It is beyond my comprehension," my father said, when he came home to dinner; "I can understand tardiness," he continued, categorically, "as the result of indolence. Lazy people dread effort and postpone it. There is a man in my employ who continues to work sometimes after hours. The men tell me that he is actually too lazy to leave off work and put away his tools. But Miss Jeannette seems active and energetic."

"She miscalculates, papa," I said, "She always imagines there is plenty of time until the last minute."

"But herein is the mystery," persisted my father. "Whence this inferiority of decellation? Why not sometimes too early and sometimes just in the right time, instead of always and everywhere late, and making others late?"

"Poor girl!" said my mother, whose compassion was uppermost. "I pity her with all my heart; yet it is not a case of life and death. This trial may be attended with beneficial results. We will hope so."

I am sorry that this hope was apparently not to be realized. The lesson failed to be read aright. Jeannette recovered her serenity, and resumed her tardy ways. A yet severer lesson was needed, and it came.

The steamer in which, after an absence of ten or twelve weeks, George Allibone was to embark for home, was lost, and not a passenger saved.

My father took me at once to my poor stricken friend, in her distant home. Pale and dumb with grief, yet with tearless eyes, she let us take her almost lifeless hand. From her bloodless lips came only the low, anguished cry, "Oh, I have been late!"

"What comfort in words? Wordless moans. My father's eyes brimmed over, and my heart was breaking for my poor Jeannette.

But relief came speedily. The joyful news was received that George was safe, having made a necessary change in his plans, and would arrive in a fortnight. The blessed sunshine came up from the depths. What should her thank offering be? She made the resolution to become at once faithful to her appointments, prompt and reliable. "I was not that way then," she would speak the consuming words, "I will."

Her father's suggestion. Willing to me, after a lapse of years, she said: "You will hardly know your dilatory friend. I remember and practice your advice of former years, to be ready for my appointments, and to reserve other work for the interval of waiting after I am ready. It is surprising how often I find out a moment left for waiting. Still, I feel the old tendency to procrastinate, and I am obliged attentively to resist it. 'Delays are dangerous,' as our old writing-copies used to run; the sentiment is hackneyed, but oh, how true! Once say to me 'Be ready when you ten thousand thanks for your faithful counsel, and we shall speak them when you unite in the visit of which we feel so sure, because your promises, as I well know, are faithfully kept."—St. Nicholas.

Lecture by the Father of Charley Ross.

About 600 people assembled at Tremont Temple last night to hear Mr. Christian K. Ross, father of the boy, the abduction of his little boy from his home at Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, on the 1st day of July, 1874, is still unexplained. It was said, after the applause with which he was received had somewhat subsided, that Mr. Ross had consented to come, "but he must not presume to come before us as a lecturer; that is not my forte; my sole and only object is to state plainly, simply and clearly to the audience the facts of a case that is nearest to my heart. There are certain events belonging to persons and families that assume such an abnormal sphere and become of such deep interest as to excite public attention, and the case of the abduction of my child is one of them. Many of the letters exchanged between the parties in this case," said he, "show that the business was to have been made permanent had the attempt to extort money from me been successful. I refused to compound the crime, and my own home has been desolated. I think my refusal to compound the crime in paying the villains the sum of money they demanded, $20,000, has made the children of other people much safer than they otherwise would have been; for the popular outcry that ensued when the news of the abduction of my little boy became known showed the kidnapers that their lives would not be safe a minute if they were arrested." Mr. Ross then went on to relate the facts connected with the abduction, occasionally reading extracts from letters received from the villains to show that the men really had the child in their possession, and that up to the time the reward of $20,000 was offered by the citizens of Philadelphia, for the return of the boy and the arrest of the abductors, they were, if not in the city, very near it, and that the offering of the reward and the renewed activity among the officers that immediately followed and the effect of driving them from the city and out of the State. He also read letters showing that the men Mosher and Douglass, who were killed at Bay Ridge, L. I., while attempting to commit a burglary, were, without doubt, the men who kidnaped the boy. Their death he regarded as an unfortunate circumstance, because they would have been very soon arrested, and then they might have revealed the boy's whereabouts. As the lecturer related the many journeys made by him in the vain attempt to recover the child, it was very evident that he had the full sympathy of his auditors. He spoke, during the lecture, of an attempt that was to have been made by the same men to abduct a little grandson of Com. Vanderbilt, and then ceased his journeys to pay a large sum as a ransom. Had the attempt been successful, he had information from the men themselves that his little boy would have been killed in order to show the parents of other little ones what to expect in case their children were stolen and the ransom demanded was not forthcoming. The insinuations that have been thrown out regarding the disappearance to the effect that he or his family knew where the child was were referred to, and Mr. Ross announced his determination to prosecute the search as long as God gave him strength so to do.—Boston Herald.

Coining Money at the Mint.

Silver is sent from the Assay Office to the Philadelphia Mint pure, or .999 fine, which is about as pure as silver can be. It is sent in large bars, and when received at the mint is melted and alloyed with copper. Coin silver is .900 fine. After being melted and alloyed the metal is cast into ingots, which are simply bars of a convenient size for handling. The metal is then assayed, to determine whether it is exactly of the standard fineness. Assaying is done by what is known as the dry or humid process. Samples for assay are taken while the silver is in a fused condition, and two assays are made of every specimen. The silver ingots then go to the coiner. They are first rolled into strips, and as the rolling process is not to make the metal brittle, it is annealed to soften it. Silver is annealed simply by heating in an open wood fire, and then being allowed to cool gradually. The silver dollar strips are passed through the rolls nine or ten times before the first annealing, and four or five times afterward. Then the process of annealing is repeated. After the last annealing the strips are run through cutters, which divide them into drafts of the proper thickness for the coins; and these, in their turn, are run through a steam punching machine which cuts planchets the proper size for the coin. From 160 to 240 are cut in a minute. As the metal gets gummy during this process, the planchets are then dipped into a bath of diluted sulphuric acid, which is too weak to act upon the surface, but effectively removes all foreign matter. The planchets are then adjusted; that is to say, they are carefully weighed, and all that are lacking in weight are cast aside; such pieces are called "lights," and the "heavies" are the pieces which weigh too much; and are rejected. The adjusting is done by women. It is a process which requires much delicacy, and scales are used which are sensitive to one-sixty-fourth of a grain. After the annealing is finished, the next operation is the milling, which is done with a coin rimsort of machine. The edges of the coin are thrown up and grooved by this process. After another cleaning with sulphuric acid the coins are ready for the die. The stamping is done on a screw-press, and both sides of the coin are stamped at the same time. The dies are cylindrical blocks of steel upon which are carved the designs to be transferred by pressure to the coins. A set of dies, as well as the machinery, is conspicuous in this part of the coining process. The designer, for the coins now in use, was Chas. E. Morgan. He draws his design on paper, from which is made a model in plaster of Paris, about a foot in size, and from this cast an electrotype is taken, upon which careful revision is made with the graver. This electrotype, like the model and cast which preceded it, is three or four times larger than the impression which appears on the dollar. The design is transferred by a steel die by using Hill's reducing machine, constructed on the principle of the pantagraph. One arm of this instrument, with a blunt point, follows the lines on the electrotype, while the other arm, to which is attached a strong and rapidly-revolving drill, reproduces the same lines, but on a smaller scale, on a steel block. By means of a press this impression is transferred to another block, in intaglio, and there upon another block, which is the parent die. After each transfer the lines are carefully improved with a graver. Steel of the same quality as that

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, April 12, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL

The central event of the week here, in point of importance, was the completion and formal opening of A. T. Stewart's Women's Hotel, which has been slowly building during ten years past, at the corner of Fourth Avenue and 33d street. Everything being finally in readiness, the enormous structure was brilliantly illuminated early on Tuesday evening, and Mrs. A. T. Stewart waited in an elegant little parlor fitted up especially for her use, to receive the three or four thousand guests who had received formal cards of invitation to this inspection. The management, however, soon learned that they had reckoned without their host in attempting to open the building for a chosen few. Immediately upon the doors being thrown back an immense and indiscriminate throng of the curious surged in, elbowing the greatly scandalized ticket-holders and taking possession of things generally. It is estimated that in the course of the evening, about thirty thousand people pushed and struggled through the hotel, inspired by the uncontrollable desire of this great white pile which for years past has stood closed and silent as the sphynx.

The "Women's Hotel" is an eight-story iron building, 200 feet square, covering fourteen lots. A hundred feet square is devoted to an interior court, which, being provided with a fine fountain and parterres of flowers, will in some measure take the place of pleasant outside surroundings. On the outside, above the store floor, there are 360 windows looking into the street, all being provided with inside blinds. There are 352 windows looking into the court yard. The lower story is cut up into thirty eight stores, and the remaining ones contain the parlors, office dining and reception rooms a library for the free use of guests, containing over 2,500 volumes, kitchens, etc., beside 503 sleeping rooms. The furniture and carpets are very handsome, and the place is expected to accommodate about one thousand women. The building is considered to be absolutely fire-proof and is self-dependent for water and gas, there being a full set of water pumps and facilities for manufacturing an abundant supply of gas. Two sumptuous elevators furnish easy communication between the floors, and over two thousand gas jets furnish illumination by night to the mammoth caravansary which has cost all complete, in the neighborhood of $3,000,000.

This enterprise has been very generally and variously misunderstood. The prevailing impression seems to have been that Mr. Stewart's idea was, to provide a home for working women, which should be a charitable institution, free or nearly so. This misapprehension was pleasant enough while it was procuring the gratuitous advertising, which has been given to the Hotel all through the years of its construction, but now that it transpires that the scheme is largely a business one, that the terms of the institution are to be comparatively high and the rules for its government rather strict, a general hue and cry is raised against Mr. Stewart and his executors. It is true that only the higher class of working women can live in the house at its present tariff, but it is also true that this class are the ones to best appreciate its comforts, and that there are plenty of them in New York to fill it full. It is however an experiment after all, and experience only can fix its value. So far, I believe, about 200 applications for admission have been accepted.

The plots of ground on which the foundations supporting the New York approach of the Brooklyn Bridge are to rest, are situated in the very oldest part of the city, and the building which have just been removed from them were, some of them, fairly tottering with age. Excavations for the foundations referred to have been begun, and the second soil which the sun has not shone upon for two or three centuries is proving as rich in curiosities at the work of the mound builders in the West. A score of suggestive relics have been turned up there within a few days. Among them were three old bayonets nearly eaten up with rust, and found close to a number of cannon balls. The bayonets evidently had belonged to Queen Anne muskets at the time of the English occupancy of the city; but the cannon-balls belong probably to the days of the redoubtable Dutch Governor and Director-General Wouter Van Twiller.

More curious still, however, was the finding within a stone's throw of the cannon balls, a Dutch pipe and a piece of tile. The former was probably the property of some respectable burgher, and could it have had a phonograph attachment in its prime, what tales it might relate! The tile evidently belongs to the same period as the pipe. On it is still to be traced the figure of Hel and the Dragon. Near by was another pipe, clearly of Indian manufacture, and some pieces of wampum, or seawan, for a long time the only circulating medium in use between the Dutch and Indians.

Near the wampum, but on an upper stratum, were several bricks of yellow clay. These are of Holland manufacture, before brick kilns were established on Long Island, by Governor Stuyvesant, in 1661, ships were loaded with bricks, barreled in Holland, and at first every dwelling was modelled after those the Dutch had left, with store-rooms for trade like those of Amsterdam and other trading towns in Fatherland. Thus at New Amsterdam and Fort Orange (Albany) rows of houses could be seen built of imported brick, with thatch-roofs, wooden chimneys and the gable ends always towards the street. A few of these remarkable Dutch houses were to be seen till within a year or two in this city, but not one now remains.

Among these spade relics, and of far more recent date than those above described, were the bored logs of the old Manhattan Water Works. As this company which was organized in 1799, supplied the city with water until 1822, the logs must be more than half a century old, yet those lately unearthed were excellently preserved. So the diggers in Frankfort street have pierced in succession strata belonging to four civilizations, so to speak, on Manhattan Island—the American, the English, the Dutch and the Indian.

The Rev. J. P. Newman, better known as "Parson Newman," who was a sort of chaplain in-ordinary to the White House during Grant's administration, and who has just returned from Palestine whither it seems that Congress for some profoundly mysterious reason saw fit to send him as "Inspector of Consuls," has accepted a call to a Methodist church here where he will shortly enter upon his labors. There will be likely to be more arduous than that of ministering to the spiritual yearnings and necessities of the ex Executive.

It is commonly supposed that prize fighting among the aristocracy is mainly confined to England; but as a proof that that effect monarchy does not entirely monopolize high toned bruisers it may be stated that a member of each of two of the most prominent firms of this city met one night this week at the rooms of a well known "professor" of the manly art, and then and there pounded each others faces out of shape in the most approved manner, and not only that were sully reported in the next mornings papers like any pair of bull dogs or game cocks. We are indeed becoming highly civilized. RADIX.

The National party is one of the strangest anomalies even of this day of foolish and mischievous political factions. It is built upon a monstrous fiction, and the time is not far in the future when the majority of its members will wonder at the folly of their own infatuation.

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Hoseline's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses for curing Consumption, Hemorrhages, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c; regular size 75c.

"German Syrup"

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years two million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist, and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents. Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—President Lincoln's widow is said to be living quietly in a little French village, nothing to return to this country lest she should again be immured in an asylum.

—Richard H. Dana, third, was offered the post of Secretary of Legation at London last summer, but declined it. The son would not go as a subordinate where the Senate would not let his father go as chief.

—Mr. Larkin Turner died in Meriwether County, Ga., on the 28th of February, at the age of 110 years. When he felt the approach of death he settled himself firmly in his chair, refusing to lie down, and he died sitting erect and without a struggle. During his long life he had but one short attack of fever, which came to him when he was but 10 years old, and up to that time he had never taken a dose of medicine.

—Ben Wade's wife was the social antithesis of her husband, being very shy. She was a lady of wife though not remarkable accomplishments, thoroughly posted on passing literature and political gossip, and in personal appearance sweet, graceful and commanding-looking. She had one particular charm—her wonderfully-beautiful and luxuriant golden hair. She conducted nearly all of the Senator's private correspondence, and read up and prepared most of the materials for his speeches, that sort of labor being especially distasteful to him. Chicago Tribune.

—The following story is told to show the ingenuity of Edison, the electrician. The telegraph office in Boston was greatly infested with cockroaches. Mr. Edison tacked several zinc strips to the walls at intervals of an eighth of an inch, and applied the positive and the negative poles of a battery alternately to the strips. He next smeared the walls above the strips with molasses. The vermin came up, and as they stepped from strip to strip they completed the circuit, received the electric shock and dropped dead by scores. Water pails put at the proper places received their bodies as they fell. We distinctly credit this story to Boston. —N. Y. Evening Post.

—Senator Blaine was suffering with an attack of gout when an invitation was received to dine with the Russian Minister. An invitation to dine with diplomat is as obligatory as an invitation to dine with native madagamy. Mr. Blaine was assisted into his shoe-hammer, white choker, and, more painful than all, his tight-fitting dress-boots. The agony was dreadful, but a public man cannot succumb to gout when diplomats are standing by. Mr. and Mrs. Blaine drove to the Legation, got painfully ascended the long terrace of steps from the sidewalk to the door of the Mission, which is the dial the Board of Public Works left fifteen feet above its original level. The mansion was left dark, in case a flag of the hall, a scrawl without gloves opened the door. The guests observed that everyone was in light evidences of an expected feast, and learned to their disgust that they had anticipated their invitation by a week. It is useless to state the feelings of Mr. and Mrs. Blaine.—Washington Cor. Chicago Tribune.

In Search of the Picturesque.

Whittier's poem of the "The Waterfall," in the Atlantic Monthly, requiring so much search for the waterfall, reminds me of an anecdote related by Judge —— of Maine. He was once on a circuit at Portland, and having a few days to spare before the term of court ensued, occupied the time in making up the pictures of the scenery in the vicinity. He had heard of a romantic cascade in the neighborhood, and was inquiring its locality of the hotel clerk, when a green-looking countryman, standing by, volunteered the information in this wise:

"Say, I can tell the Judge all about that 'ere cascade, for I live close by it."

The Judge turned to him, and, expressing his thanks, desired to be informed how he might reach the place.

"Easiest thing in the world, Judge," replied the man; "it ain't a great way out on the Saco turnpike. You go on —as all I guess about four mile, till you come to a cross-road, and then you turn off to the left, you keep along, say a half mile, till you come to a pasture, where there's a pair o' bars. If you've got down, mind you put 'em up, 'cause the owner is mighty particular about his cattle. You keep along, as I say, some rods, till you come to another pair o' bars—mind and put them up, too—then you foller up that road till it comes to a fifth; you kinder circle round that till you come to another sort of crooked path that crosses a road; take the right hand, turn and go down the hollow, foller up the path till you come to a path that leads you round the mountings; that brings you into the main road that leads you right up to old Illsley's barn."

"But how will I know Illsley's house?"

"His house? Of course you'll see Illsley round there."

"But how shall I know it is Illsley?"

"Sure, Judge, you can't make a mistake about Illsley; you'll know him by his yaller nankin trousers."

"Nankin trousers! Does he always wear nankin trousers?"

"In course he does, Judge. Why, you see, the way on't was this: There was a man down here to Portland that owed Illsley considerable, and couldn't pay. So Illsley levied on him, and attached six cases o' yaller nankin he had in his store, and them he took for debt and carried 'em home. Well, Miss Illsley, she was so plagued mad that she told the old man that he'd got to wear out the stuff in trousers—that was about seven years ago—and Illsley he's been a-wearing nankin trousers ever since; one pair in summer, two pair in fall and spring, and about a half a dozen pair in winter. Judge, you'd laugh till you split if you only see old Illsley in them trousers! Miss Illsley, she ain't much of a tailoress, and she makes 'em narrer at the bottom and puckered up where they go round him, so that he looks jest like a dandipin, bottom-up. Seems to me as et I should bust every time I see him."

"Well, well," exclaimed the Judge, with some impatience, "it ever I find Illsley, what then? How shout the cascade?"

"Cascade, Judge?" replied his informant. "You are the particularest man I ever see. I should think old Illsley was easily-enough for one day, anyway, and arter you've seen him you'll forget all about the cascade!"—Harper's Magazine.

The Choice of Books for Children.

Prof. Sumner's criticism of juvenile literature, recently published in Scribner's Monthly, was sound and wholesome, without doubt, but while it very distinctly pointed out a grave evil, it failed to show with equal precision the necessary remedy, and without such a prescription the alarm created by the diagnosis of the disease may, perhaps, do harm in some quarters as well as good in others.

The tenor of the article, of course, made it plain enough that the only proper remedy for hurtful literature is harmless literature; that the only way in which we can keep our boys and girls from the contamination of bad books is to substitute good books for the bad ones; but this is not sufficiently definite. There are good books and good books, there are good books which boys and girls will read with intense interest, and there are equally good books which they will not read at all. To put books of the latter sort into their hands in the hope thereby to prevent the reading of hurtful literature is simply useless. The must be taken to convince boys and girls that there are good books which are more interesting than bad books are, else the attempt to substitute the one for the other must necessarily fail; and this conviction can be secured only by making the fact evident, only by choosing good books that are in fact intensely interesting.

The common mistake in this matter arises from attempts to judge literature by classes. The bad books must sharply condemned are stories of adventure, and too many parents attempt to avoid the difficulty by excluding stories of adventure from their lists. This is simply to fix the evil, because every healthy boy with an active body and mind wants stories of adventure, and if good ones are not given to him he is apt to get bad ones for himself. This boyish craving for stories of action, of outdoor life and adventure, is perfectly natural and perfectly wholesome. It is as natural as the boyish desire to climb trees or to spin tops, or to play ball, or to do anything else that involves active exertion. If it was possible to repress the taste, as it is not, it would be harmful to do so. The right thing for every parent to do is not to give his boys books that are dull to them, but to choose wholesome books that the boys will like and read. Stories of adventure must always form a considerable part of every such selection, but they need not be mischievous stories of adventure. They may be as intensely interesting as you please without being in the least hurtful; and they must be intensely interesting if they are to take the place of the bad of the foolish men hitherto known and put them parallel with those of the present time, we can decidedly pronounce that there are among living men a much greater number of individuals who show a relatively inferior type than there were among the fossils known up to this time. Further it is just the highest geniuses of the Quaternary period that have had the good luck to be preserved to us; we do not venture to surmise. Our usual course is to argue from the character of a single fossil subject to the generality of those not yet found. Here, however, we will not do. I will not affirm that the whole race was as good as the few skulls that have survived. But one thing I must say—that not a single fossil skull of an age or of an authropoid ape has yet been found that could really have belonged to a human being. Every addition to the amount of objects which we have obtained as materials to discuss has removed us further from the hypothesis propounded. Besides, we cannot entirely set aside the consideration that it may perhaps have been only in a particular position of the earth that the men of the Tertiary period lived. This might be just as possible as in the case of the remarkable discovery made of late years in North America, that the fossil ancestors of our horses are found in regions where the horse itself has long since entirely disappeared. When America was discovered, it was generally horseless. In the region where the ancestors of our horses lived there was not a living horse to be found. Just so it may be that the Tertiary man once existed in Greenland or Lemuria, and will still be brought to light somewhere or other out of the depths. Only as a matter of fact we must positively recognize that as yet there always exists a sharp line of demarcation between man and the ape. We cannot teach, we cannot pronounce it to be a conquest of science that man descends from the ape or from any other animal."—Philadelphia Press.

A Martyr to Perpetual Motion.

The Journal of Commerce, apropos of an inquiry made by a correspondent, relates a curious story for the truth of which it vouches. The correspondent had asked whether any Government had ever offered a reward to the successful discoverer of practical perpetual motion, and whether the idea of perpetual motion is not contrary to natural laws? Our venerable contemporary replies that no such offer has been made; but that the idea of perpetual motion is in itself quite in accordance with natural laws, the planetary world furnishing a visible illustration of it. It then says that thirty years ago a machine, moved only by gravitation, was exhibited in its office and seen by many. It ran in connection with a pendulum that regulated its motion, which was very slow but incessant. The editor had it under lock and key and still it moved. It was then exhibited at a fair in New Jersey, and there

"A professor from Princeton College and one or two other very learned and benevolent persons were indignant that the people should be so imposed upon, and, making the necessary affidavit, had the inventor, then an old man nearly fourscore, arrested for swindling, as he had taken money at the door from a few visitors. The man, the machine and the avengers of the law were brought into the court. Upon their representation that the cylinder could not revolve unless there was a spring concealed in it, an axe was brought and, in spite of the tremulous remonstrances of the inventor, it was split into a dozen pieces. As in a former celebrated trial (described in John viii: 10), the accusers withdrew in silence, self-convicted. There was no spring in it; it had gone around of itself, but it was ruined, and so was the owner.

But no practical good could have come from the invention, as it barely overcame its own friction and could not furnish any motive power.—N. Y. Graphic.

How Young Eyes are Made Near-Sighted.

A prolonged and steady looking at an object or at objects near the eye, though at proper distance, without rest or change in the focus of the visual forces, as in long and absorbed novel-reading, intense study, or persistent diligence in needlework, the practice of reading or otherwise using the sight at too short range are causes of near-sightedness. This latter results, in part, from insufficient light; from its faulty direction, so that the hand or body throws a shadow on the page; or so that the direct rays fall upon the eye, causing undue contraction of the pupil, while the page is in shadow. It results also from improperly graded desks, from too small and poor type and inferior printing-ink, and from faulty color and quality of printing-paper; also from pale writing-ink—made when copperas and from the substitution of the lead-pencil for the pen, especially in the evening. A prone or forward position of the head too long maintained, or frequently repeated and becoming a habit is another cause. This results from reading or studying with the book in the lap, and from the use of desks not graded to the height of the pupil. Dr. Andrew says, "In the hygiene of myopia the very first point is to guard against working in a stooping position." He favors high, sloping desks and indicates "reclinear drawing on a flat surface" as a class of work which is especially objectionable. Reading and studying in railroad-cars is known to be a fruitful source of injury. But insufficient light, perhaps more than any other cause, produces diseases of the eye and disarrangement of the vision. This is not confined to the schools. Sadly frequent as it is found to be there, it is believed to be yet oftener illustrated at home, both by daylight and in the evening, in preparing for the school and otherwise. Artificial illumination is faulty at best, but, even in the best-favored homes the chief group is apt to monopolize the shaded drop-light or student-lamp, while the schollar, with his text-books, is found somewhere in the outer circle.—Popular Science Monthly.

Tact.

Tact literally means touch. It is that quality by which one "feels" his way. It is something more than skill—something more than judgment; it is sometimes common sense. It is that power by which one knows how to do the right thing in absences of precedents and rules. It delights in unexpected and glories in exceptional cases. It arrives at a conclusion too quickly for analysis of the reasoning faculties to it, and you recognize it only when it has accomplished its object, as a bullet which is seen only when it hits the target, not in the air. Tact is the god of surprisms are useless and "similar cases" ignored. Tact is to talent what genius is to knowledge, the one forges and shapes what the other gathers. Tact creates, talent discovers. Talent knows what to do, tact knows how to do it. Talent is wealth, tact is ready money. The one is momentary, intentional, the other is long and laborious. Tact presupposes quick perception, lively sympathy, versatility and ready adaptability to circumstances. It can be cultivated, but largely a native quality. When cultivated it is apt to become cunning, craftiness, manipulation, and degenerates into indirectity. It will never do to lose the lonesomy of the dove in the wisdom of the serpent. Tact is always truthful, legitimate, honest. It studies opportunities, and has a keen sense of the eternal fitness of things. The Scotch minister who preached against the sin of luxury to an audience not three of whom had shoes on their feet, was wanting in tact. As we say, his "diligers are all dromdes," his zeal is untempered with knowledge. Such a man, from such a want, is a bungling workman. He becomes, in his rashness, a moral delusion, who overturns more of the charities of God than he safely drives. Tact adapts itself to the occasion, to the persons with whom it deals. It is as necessary for the physician to know the human body as to know his medicine-chest. Voltaire said of the physicians of Voltaire said of the physicians of Voltaire said of the physicians of "BUSINESS DEPRESSION."—I have noticed those in the country who escape a business activity and prosperity only in spending sullen, despondent sessile, and screaming thus. For several years past the commerce at Pine Lake has steadily increased until last season's growths, and we may say, excessive traffic, which caused a corresponding depression to unavoidably follow, and we find ourselves in the midst of it at this time. But this cloud has a "silver lining." The down which drop from the drooping branches of trade water and add invigorate the incipient of our country and our people. As we write the hatbed is about as compared with the hustle of previous seasons, but a power is below all, lifting, lifting, feeding, nurturing, and we are being elevated above the fog from a dependency on a community of dictators. The technical term "depression" in fair country means a suspension of said legal with a hole cut in the timber. The aw, that great genii of transformation is at work. The homesteads disappear, and forests cover the hills and the valleys, and look on upon the crystal waters. Which an industrious man can't see ordained he will do something else, and that something else is the all-potent power that we speak of. The stock commerce causes a scarcity of money, but it causes no scarcity of energy, muscle, grit or labor. The current of these latter elements are turned into channels which sweep out of sight for a brief period, to return with redoubled force and carry away hard times as a forgotten thing. Let us not talk about "business depression" when our acreage of tillable soil is multiplying as the fishes multiply. We desire, and expect to see the return of our previous commercial activity, but as a region we have suffered no vital injury by the seeming decline of our shipping interests; but rather, substantial benefit has accrued to us all, and which, having received the impetus, must bring the most satisfactory results.

Not only is the chief aim of the National party as now organized exceedingly foolish but it is absolutely impossible of accomplishment. If the Resumption Act is ever repealed at all, that must be done by the present congress, and no new party movement can change the present Congress. But the resumption act will take effect next January, and the condition of actual specie payment will probably be reached three months sooner than that, paper and specie being at par with each other. And specie payment once reached will knock the resumption repeal issue out of politics beyond recall. Money will be plentier, business will be better, confidence will be stronger, and the man will be laughed at for a fool who then proposes that the Government take the back track and return to an irredeemable currency.

Henry Sackett, a prominent farmer of Assyria, Barry county, had an encounter with a bull on his farm, on the 4th. The animal gored him in a terrible manner. Mr. Sackett was found in an insensible condition a short distance from the animal, which was tied in its accustomed place. It was evident that he finally overcame the infuriated beast, and not until he had secured himself he realize how frightfully he had been torn. His body was gored in many places, and his bowels pulled out and by upon his breast. He survived his injuries only an hour after he was discovered.

Summer shawls and parisols at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

THE debate in the British Parliament sheds new light on the Eastern question from an English point of view. There is not as much fire as the tremendous volume of smoke indicated. Nobody wants war as much as he made believe he did. The Earl of Beaconsfield cannot see why England should be unarmed when all the other powers were arming. This is a sensible observation, but is not warlike. Lord Derby, who is supposed to know what he is talking about, thinks the only conceivable motive for haste in war preparations was to take advantage of the war feeling. An Austrian alliance with England, he thinks, is doubtful, and all the other powers he believes are certain to stand aloof. So short Lord Derby sees no ground for war. Even the Marquis of Salisbury has grounds for hoping there will be no war. Mr Gladstone, in the House of Commons, denied that the Government had failed to make a case of emergency, and he made contemptuous reference to Lord Salisbury's circular. These declarations in Parliament are many of them in the nature of speculations, and all of them somewhat reasoning to the advocates of peace.—Inter Ocean

OLD MISSION NURSERY

Apple Trees $8 per 100.

For 30 days I will sell a block of apple trees at the Nursery that are now large for beginners, at the low price of $8 per 100, thing your people and help dig and select to suit yourself.

I will furnish teams to deliver at the dock free of charge.

I have an immense stock of extra fine 3 and 4 year-old apple trees of all the leading hardy varieties which I will sell at $15 per 100 handled and delivered at the boat. I also own some last sound large thrifty trees, six to seven feet high.

50 Trees at 100 rates.

This nursery had no connection with the nursery stock destroyed around the country a few years ago by one Adams.

I have these good trees from all other nurseries together in the Traverse region and will sell as low at any time as good trees can be grown for.

We warrant all varieties true to name, and employ no irresponsible peddlers. C. P. A.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, dated the 15th day of December A. D. 1874, made and executed by Mary Ann Case, to Newton A. Balch, of Charlevoix County, Mich., and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1874, in Liber 2 of Mortgages, on page 264, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said Newton A. Balch, to Lydia Smith and Rachel S. Smith, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the 3d day of February, 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan aforesaid, in Liber Four of Mortgages, on page 425, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Hundred and Sixteen Dollars and thirty-three cents, and an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for in said Mortgage, and no proceeding at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 10th day of May, A. D. 1878, at two o'clock in the afternoon, I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder at the front door of the Court House in the Village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with seven per cent. interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee as thirty dollars provided for therein; the premises being described in said mortgage as the south half of the north west quarter of Section Four (4) in Township Thirty-two (32) North of Range Five (5) West, containing eighty (80) acres, pc. United States survey.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January A. D. 1878. Present, J. D. Kneen, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Nathaniel F. Youmans, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Hiddle E. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon, it is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix SENTINEL, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

RELIGIOUS.—Rev. James Inwood occupied the pulpit of Rev. B. H. Whitman, in this village, Sunday morning, and Mr. Whitman held Quarterly meeting at Barnard. Rev. H. P. Blake, of Norwood, occupied Mr. Whitman's pulpit the same evening.

MARINE.—The schooner F. A. Morse, with 38,000 bushel of wheat from Chicago to Buffalo, was dismasted on Lake Erie on Saturday last.

—Now in port.—Schooners Fleetwing, Monitor, and scow Owen.

—The propeller Menominee was here Sunday, and the Empire State on Monday, both bound up.

—The report that the owners of the propeller Menominee contemplate withdrawing her from this route is untrue.

—The steamer Gazelle will be on her route soon after May 1st.

—The tug Tillson has spent the greater portion of the past week in dredging out the upper river, and has secured a depth of eight feet.

—Since the close of navigation last fall the propeller Fountain City, of the Western Transportation line, has had a most thorough overhauling at Buffalo. She has received new ceiling, new flooring, new keelson, new arches, new deck frames and decks, new bulwarks, and entire new bow, wales and cabins. Besides she has been completely furnished and refitted in the most elegant and luxurious style. Her engines and boilers have been rebuilt—in fact to name all that has been done would be to name all the parts of a new boat, and everything has been changed, so that the old boat, so long and favorably known, but little more than the name remains.

TEACHER'S EXAMINATION.—A Public Examination of candidates for Teacher's Certificates will be held at the Union School House in the Village of Charlevoix on Saturday, May 4th, 1878.

R. J. SEAMAN,
Supt. of Schools.

A new assortment of white goods at Carpenter Bartholomew's. Very cheap.

DIED.—A dispatch came from Appleton, Wis., to E. W. Fuller, the Fanning Mill Agent, informing him of the death of his wife. He was absent in Traverse City, and the dispatch was forwarded to him there. Mr. Fuller had engaged a house in this village, and expected to remove his family here this summer.

DEATH AT BOYNE FALLS.—On the 15 th a seven year-old son of H. Magee was sent to the barn for eggs. Shortly after Mrs. Magee went in search of him, and found him only a few steps from the house, lying on his face, dead. The boy had shown no symptoms of being ill. A doctor was called immediately, who announced that the boy died of congestion of the heart, which instantly stopped the circulation of the blood.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Election at Norwood is over at last! Peace, with her snowy wings now broods over the late ensanguined fields. The dead have been properly laid away, and the wounded are slowly recovering.

Another war-cloud, however, is looming over the horizon. One Mr. Webster, (I did not learn that his name was Daniel) has astonished the virtuous citizens of Norwood with the startling fact that there is danger of "John Sherman's" shipping his $71,000,000 of gold to Europe, and worse yet, of then going himself. And a "Club" has been raised in Norwood, not to strike said Sherman, I think—for what care greenbackers about gold? If anybody in Europe or elsewhere, wants that gold let them have it; for haven't we a machine that can turn out "full legal tender greenback dollars?" It has done it, and in the terse and eloquent language of the said Webster, "What man or Government has done, man or Government can do." Hurrah for our side!

THE CHARLEVOIX SUMMER RETREAT.

The Baptist Committee Will Recommend Charlevoix.

The Joint Committee of Michigan and Indiana Baptists visited Charlevoix last week, and made a survey and inspection of the proposed Summer Retreat. The Committee were decidedly non-committal to all our interrogatories on the subject, but after they left we received the following note, which explains itself:

EDITOR SENTINEL:

"Charlevoix Summer Retreat!" We like it better than any place we have yet seen, and shall recommend it to our brethren.

For the Committee,
H. W. PAGE, Prest.

This note was written after the Committe had thoroughly examined the attractions of Little Traverse Bay. The matter may be considered definitely settled in favor of Charlevoix.

If you want to save money and hold your temper, call at our store and examine our stock of goods before buying elsewhere, and be convinced that we still keep the best assortment, and sell goods as reasonable as any house west of New York City.

THE Petoskey Democrat of last week had a short article headed "Shall the Baptists locate here or at Charlevoix?" The editor claims to have had an interview with certain members of the Committee during which it was intimated that if any inducements were held out to them they would locate at Petoskey. We venture the assertion that no such intimation was given. The Democrat states that it will take one day longer to perform the journey if located at Charlevoix than it would if located at Petoskey. We are not astonished at the magnitude of this falsehood, but we are disgusted at its meanness. The journey from Petoskey to Charlevoix occupies just one hour and forty minutes. The fact is, and the Committee undoubtedly recognize it, that Charlevoix possesses attractions which so far excel anything in the vicinity of Petoskey, that the latter place sinks out of sight. The Committee are also of the opinion that the superior merits of Charlevoix as a summer resort absorb any such trifling obstacle as the Democrat mentions. Hence the result which we publish elsewhere.

THE BELL.—The bell for the M. E. Church of this village arrived on Wednesday and now hangs in the spire of the new edifice. It has a clear resonant tone, in C sharp, and the sound of it rings out in joyful measure as we write.

A Radical Reform.—For a few years past some of the good women of this country have been deceiving themselves. A reform in this direction would greatly assist in bringing back the good old times of plenty. To effect this, stop using high priced baking powder and use Smith's Pure Soda Saleratus made by the new process, and always have nice biscuits and save a new silver dollar on every barrel of flour used.

The debate in the British Parliament sheds new light on the Eastern question from an English point of view. There is not as much fire as the tremendous volume of smoke indicated. Nobody wants war as much as he made believe he did. The Earl of Beaconsfield cannot see why England should be involved when all the other powers were sitting. This is a sensible conservatism, but is not manifest. Lord Derby, who is supposed to know what he is talking about, thinks the only conceivable motive for Russia in war preparations was to take advantage of the war feeling. An Austrian alliance with England, he thinks, is doubtful and all the other powers he believes are certain to remain neutral. Stanley and Derby agree to demand for war. Even the Marquis of Salisbury has grounds for hoping there will be no war. Mr. Glad-

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A RESOLUTION was adopted in the Senate, on the 23, to transfer to the State Department for safe keeping the records of the Commission on the Electoral count. The Railroad Bankrupt bill was further debated. A joint resolution was passed in the House authorizing the Commissioners having in charge the Washington Monument to apply $8000 to giving grader-subsidy to the foundations. Mr. Hazelton explained the majority report recommending the adoption of a resolution declaring the office of Doorkeeper vacant.

BILLS were reported in the Senate, on the 24, in relation to the enlistment of colored men in the army; the Naval Appropriation bill, with amendments. A Conference Committee was appointed on the bill for temporary clerks in the Treasury Department. The Railroad Bankrupt bill was further debated. A resolution was adopted, in the House, admitting one representative of each public journal, which employs a regularly accredited correspondent for reporting the proceedings of Congress. In the Senate, the session was a stormy one. The River and Harbor appropriation bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations, ordered printed and recommitted. The case of Doorkeeper Polk was further considered.

A RESOLUTION was agreed to in the Senate, on the 4th, providing for a select committee of seven to consider the propriety of taking the Treasury Building from the Department of the Interior, and the expediency of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on forestry be printed. The Public Railroad Bankrupt bill was further considered. A bill was introduced in the House providing for the issue of twenty-five and fifty dollar fractional currency, and that any person desiring into the Treasury any sum or sums of United States such amount of fractional currency as he may desire. The case of Doorkeeper Polk was then taken up, and a resolution was adopted—69 to 39—declaring the office vacant, and that the House proceed to vote for a Doorkeeper. It was then announced as the result, said House elected Austin Brady. Brady, the choice of the House, will at once qualify and assume the duties of that office until his successor shall be appointed and qualified.

IN the Senate, on the 5th, the Naval Appropriation bill was passed as it came from the Committee on Naval Affairs, having made further consideration of the Pacific Railroad Bankrupt bill. Mr. Thurman said he would ask the Senate to name a day on which the bill before adjournment, but a motion to adjourn to the 9th was finally carried—32 to 28. In the House, Mr. Dickinson, (Mich.), put in submission, for the position of Doorkeeper, Gen. James Shields, of Missouri. (Democrat), presenting him as a Union regimental soldier, a leader of no mean reputation as a party of order, participated in principally by Messrs. Hulpir and Cox (N. C.). Both Democrats rejecting the right to make a motion for a vacancy, and giving the Republicans a right before the House to vote upon the question to the House for its decision, and a motion to lay the motion on the table was carried—yeas 120, nays 112, so the motion was declared carried, and was entered in the Journal as the result. The vote was announced by announcing Democrats, and the Republicans voted solidly for Shields. Mr. Dickinson declared the election of Shields Army on the ground that he was a citizen from the time of the Rebellion to 1867. The votes were suspended and the bill was passed—216 to 6.

DOMESTIC.

THE State Department at Washington has got a letter, from the Rio Grande, the Mexican authorities, recently, on requisition, returned a herd of stolen cattle to their Texas owners, and took steps to punish the thieves.

THE failures in New York, during March, numbered eighty-five, with aggregate liabilities amounting to $7,177,326, and assets to $5,584,681.

AT Pawtucket, R. I., on the night of the 5th, during the performance of a variety company, Ella Volante, a trapeze performer, held an apple on her head, which was to be shot by Mrs. Jessie Fowler, known on the stage as Franklin. The shooter stood with her back to the mark, taking aim by reflection in a mirror. The ball was discharged, the Ella Volante fell dead on the stage, shot through the forehead. Mrs. Franklin was taken into custody by the police.

AN oil train ran into a freight train on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, near Slatington, Pa., on the morning of the 5th, exploding the engine of the oil train, and burning several oil cars. One man was instantly killed, fifteen were seriously and probably fatally burned, and about twenty-five other persons were slightly injured.

THE New England Methodist Conference, in session at Westfield, Mass., on the 5th, voted not to admit ministers in future who use tobacco.

ACCOUNTS, received in Washington on the 7th, from the Texas border show that of late there had been few, if any, importations from the Mexican side. Members of Congress who had the subject of our relations with Mexico under consideration say the policy of our Government in recognizing that of Mexico had produced an improved condition of affairs on the border; that the latter Government had not yet done what was required by the act as a prerequisite to recognition. One of the most serious causes of complaint was that our citizens were not protected from forays, and that British and French subjects residing in Mexico were, it is said, not subjected to such illegal exactions.

ONE of the buildings of the Steuben County (N. Y.) Poor-house, near Bath, was burned, on the night of the 6th, and fifteen insane paupers, who was one of the fifteen who lost their lives in the ruins. There were between sixty and seventy inmates altogether.

THE Wellfleet Savings Bank, of Massachusetts, with deposits of $462,000, and the South Boston Savings Bank, with a deposit line of $1,957,000, suspended on the 8th. A savings bank at Pawtucket, R. I., also suspended.

A SMALL steamer, called the Sandy Fashion, running on the Sandy River, in Kentucky, exploded her boilers, on the night of the 6th. Four persons were killed and several others were injured.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Chairman of the Executive Committee of the National party of Pennsylvania have called a State Convention, to be held at Philadelphia on the 9th of May.

BOTH branches of the Maryland Legislature have adopted a resolution instructing the Attorney-General of the State to institute proceedings in the United States Supreme Court for reopening the Tilden-Hayes Presidential controversy, in a judicial investigation of the question of the legality of the adjustment made by the Electoral Commission.

THE Missouri State National Convention will be held at Sedalia, on the 29th of May, to nominate a full set of State and Congressional ticket will be nominated.

THE Miss sachusetts House of Representatives, on the 30, passed an amendment to the Liquor law adopting the Maine law, and limiting the number of licenses to be granted in any city or town to one for each 1,000 inhabitants.

AT the recent election in Rhode Island, Van Zandt (Rep.) was re-elected Governor by about 3,000 plurality over Lawrence (Dem.). The aggregate vote was about 60,000. Legislature largely Republican.

MR. GWISS, the Maryland Attorney-General, according to a Washington dispatch of the 6th, had declared that the State results there were wholly inoperative, and he could not conceive of a contingency arising which would require his services.

THE National House Committee on the Revision of the Laws Regulating the Counting of Electoral Votes for President and Vice-President have agreed to the proposition for the election of President and Vice-President by a direct vote of the people.

EX-GOV. MOSES, of South Carolina, was arrested in New York City, on the night of the 7th, by a Deputy Sheriff of Charleston, S. C., and locked up on a charge of having forged and passed a note for $300. The obnoxious charges and pleas in the case in Republican circles, but before the bill was passed over the veto the House adopted a resolution to refer the question to the House for its decision, and a motion to lay the motion on the table was declared

A ROME (Italy) special of the 4th says Russia had offered to send an Ambassador to the Vatican in order that the Pope would accept the present condition of the Church in the Russian Empire.

ON the 4th, the British House of Commons adopted a resolution favoring an increase in the tobacco and malt taxes—the increase rendered necessary by the increased expenditures consequent upon the impending troubles with Russia.

ACCORDING to dispatches of the 7th, the war cloud in the East was darkening to significant proportions. It was said that Russia had signified a willingness to abate her pretensions materially, and, thanks to the friendly efforts of Germany, to concede certain points to England and Austria. She had, it was said, admitted that the Bosnavian question was a matter for European concern. A rumor prevailed that Gortschakoff had resigned to make the concessions to the Powers easy.

IN the British House of Lords, on the night of the 5th, the past, present, and future policy of England on the Eastern question was discussed by Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Granville, Earl Derby, Earl Carnarvon and others. A resolution was passed, thanking the Queen for calling out her reserves. In the House of Commons, a similar resolution of thanks was offered and discussed by Sir Stafford Northcote, Gladstone, Hardy and others. But no vote was reached, and the debate was adjourned.

Details of the Terrible Catastrophe at Bath, N. Y.

BATH, N. Y., April 8.

The building of the Steuben County Poor-House, burned Saturday night, was a brick, thirty by forty feet, two stories high. Nearly all the windows were grated, and there was but one mode of egress from each story. No night-watchman was employed about the building, and there was no fire-apparatus. The County-House is two miles from Bath, and the Fire Department did not go out.

The County-House is under the direction of Horatio Seymour, Jr., Superintendent of the Poor, and Mrs. Mary McCollum, a matron. The latter was burned to death in her room, and her body was found in the ruins. There were between sixty and seventy inmates altogether.

THE Wellfleet Savings Bank, of Massachusetts, with deposits of $25,000, and the South Boston Savings Bank, with a deposit line of $1,858,000, suspended on the 8th. A savings bank at Pittsfield, N. H., also suspended.

AT the recent election in Rhode Island, Van Zandt (Rep.) was reelected Governor by about 3,800 plurality over Lawrence (Dem.). The Legislature stands: Senate 25 to 13; House 61 to 39. Five on the first floor and two on the second were burned. At the first alarm Eli Carrington, the keeper, rushed out of the burning building with an employee, and knocked in a door at the foot of the stairs leading from the second story. Eighteen or twenty women were piled up at the foot of the stairs, and a cloud of suffocating smoke rolled down. The women were pulled out, and Carrington started up-stairs, but was driven back by the smoke. In five minutes from the time of the alarm the upper story was in possession of the flames, and in half an hour the roof fell in. The first-floor door, leading from the men's department, was never unlocked, and no one in the building was locked in it except Ford. THE 3rd circuit Circuit Judge C. J. Reilly, of Detroit, against the Sunday News came to a termination by settlement on the 2d. It had its origin in a scandalous item published some years ago by the paper, under a sensational heading, accusing the Judge of grave immorality, for which the only foundation was the affidavit of a half-witted fellow, which had not been filed with any public officer, although it was intended to be part of some legal proceedings which were never pushed. The case was tried, and resulted in a verdict of $4,500 damages for the plaintiff; but the Judge granted a new trial, which on his motion was ordered a new trial, which resulted in $5,000 damages. This case also appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed the finding, and ordered a third trial. Pending this the News has settled the matter by paying Reilly $2,500, and on the 3d published an explicit apology, stating with the statement that the reputation of Judge Reilly as a gentleman, lawyer, and Judge had never stood higher than at present, and that the case has attracted much attention throughout the West.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, April 19, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

On the 11th, our republican friends celebrated the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, and on the 13th, Alexander Hamilton. I don't know when there has been a more marked appreciation made which had been so universally satisfactory. For some reason or other, Mr. Taylor is one of the most popular of men everywhere. Those who neither know him personally or, to any extent, through his writings. Perhaps it is the sympathetic kindness which emanates from the man which raises it but, however that may be, it is quite certain that the philosopher, poet, novelist, lawyer, orator, and now diplomatist, is one of the best liked men in America. Especially he is a favorite of the nation to whom he is accredited, his intimate acquaintance with, and love for their language, literature and customs, endearing him to the "Vaterland" above all other foreigners. The Germans of this city have quite danced in their demonstrations of approval of Mr Taylor's selection, and have filled with these to the manner born in testifying their good will.

The result of this generous compellation has been a series of dinners (not to mention "dinnings" from the cadaverously above mentioned) commencing with his confirmation by the Senate and ending only when he stepped aboard the friendly steamer by which he made good his escape, such as has seldom been offered on any public man. If Mr. Taylor got away without gout, apoplexy and delirium tremens, it must be attributed jointly to his iron constitution and prudent abstemiousness; and even as it is I shrewdly suspect that he will find seasickness rather a relief than otherwise.

We shall look with interest for the accounts of Mr. Taylor's reception by Kaiser Wilhelm and that sturdy old gaunt of statecraft, upon whom each of the quarrelsome empires of Europe finds it necessary to keep one eye anxiously fixed while glaring upon his neighbor with the other, and who seems so well satisfied with holding the balance of power as not to care to drop it on anybody's toe.

Gen. P. Rowell & Co's recent "opening" in their magnificent new quarters on Spruce street, is a strong reminder and an equally strong proof of the extraordinary success of this firm in a business which its senior member may be said to have practically created. Years ago Mr. Rowell commenced his self-identification with printer's ink, in connection with the Boston Post. After remaining 5 or 6 years in that position, he found this field of action too restricted, and came to New York, where he soon bought out the oldest advertising agency in the country, if not in the world, and set out upon a course of quite unparalled success, which appears now to be at its zenith.

It seems to be the aim of special and single genius who make what may be called the specialty interests the world over, and Gen P. Rowell is certainly one of the number. From the start, he seemed to grasp the superior possibilities of the peculiar business which he had undertaken, as one of his few predecessors had done before him, and commenced at once to so revolutionize and broaden it that it became in his hands almost a new industry. Those who have any considerable dealings with the house soon see the secret of this development in the perfection of method and system which prevail throughout the establishment, where on an average 600,000 newspapers a year are received, examined and filed, an account kept with each of several thousand different publications, and an immensely complicated and voluminous correspondence with papers and advertisers constantly maintained. Perhaps the best exhibition of these qualities was Rowell's organization and maintenance of the Centennial Newspaper exhibition, which was one of the most admirable and admired features of our Exposition. Newspaper advertising in the United States never received from any other source or from all other sources such an impetus as it has long given it. Turning to his crystal ensemble, the advertising agency business had, as a rule, been done in a limited quantities and unsystematic way, with no uniformity of cost and no certainty of result. What it is to-day it is quite unnecessary to describe.

It is well known that a large portion of the foreign goods imported into this country pay duty according to weight. During the last year the necessities of the government at this point for the time special was over $250,000.

Our gradual settling down to warm weather turns our thoughts again to the summer resort exercises, which from an imminent a feature in our hot weather recreation, will do so much to render life tolerable to those forced to remain in the city from June to October. The facilities for this sort of pleasure were reinforced this week by the launching of a brand new steamer called the Grand Republic, which will carry comfortably 4,000 passengers.

Ex Governor Moses, of South Carolina, who was connected with the infamous ring which stole the state four a few years ago, has just been arrested here for forgery, and will doubtless expiate at last at least, of his heinous crimes in jail.

The Vanderbilt will case still drags its slow length along, its lawyers now and then getting excited and irreverent testimony which has at last, fairly exasperated the long suffering judge, who is hearing the case, and who stated somewhat sharply to the counsel for contestants a day or two since, that during all this time they had not adduced a particle of proof supporting their charge of insanity, and intimated that he was thoroughly tried of them. Not very encouraging to those who hoped to finger some part of Wm. H. Vanderbilt's millions.

Just as I am about sending off this letter, extras are carried in the street announcing the death of William M. Tweed. As he was very ill from a complication of disorders at last accounts, this rumor is probably correct. His adventures and misfortunes since his first incarceration, and the excitement caused by the latest effort to obtain his release have steadily weakened him till at last, his frame, enfeebled by age, found it impossible longer to sustain the pressure.

RADIX.

The first step towards opening the Fitz John Porter case has been most unwisely taken by President Hayes. That officer's treachery prolonged the Rebellion for months, and sent thousands of Union soldiers to their graves. The record shows the fact that the court martial sentenced Porter to be cashiered and prohibited forever from holding any office of trust or emolument under the United States, and that the sentence was approved by Mr. Lincoln. It is part, however, of the inside and unofficial history of this trial that the great majority of the court martial was in favor of the death penalty, but finally it became reasonably certain that Mr Lincoln's kindness of heart would prevent the execution of such a sentence, and the result was the unanimous finding which the President did approve. That court martial gave forty five days to the examination of this case. Its verdict was reached after the accused had been given the amplest hearing, it was examined carefully and approved deliberately by Edwin M. Stanton and Abraham Lincoln, it was just in its condemnation and merciful in its sentence, and it ought not to be disturbed.

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Sore Throats, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10cts; regular size, 75c.

"German Syrup"

No other medicine in the world was ever given such a test of its curative qualities as Boschee's German Syrup. In three years one million four hundred thousand small bottles of this medicine were distributed free of charge by Druggists in this country to those afflicted with Consumption, Asthma, Croup, severe Coughs, Pneumonia and other diseases of the Throat and Lungs, giving the American people undeniable proof that German Syrup will cure them. The result has been that Druggists in every town and village in the United States are recommending it to their customers. Go to your Druggist, and ask what they know about it. Sample Bottles 10 cents, Regular size 75 cents. Three doses will relieve any case. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—The Caro (Mich.) Advertiser says John Riley, of that village, who is a very fleshy man, has met with a singular accident. While stooping over, the calf of his leg burst, and the wound is more painful and serious than a broken leg would be.

—The body of a man named Joseph R. Leaney was found the other day standing erect and lifeless in a sunk hole in the rear of his residence at Bridesburg, Pa. He had been ill with fever, and while temporarily deranged jumped out of the window of his bed-room and thence into the hole.

—John Connelly, a child fourteen months old, was playing in the house of his parents at No. 206 Van Buren street, on Sunday morning, when Mr. Connelly, who was smoking at the time, blew some smoke in his child's face. The baby was strangled, and died before a physician could be procured.—N. Y. Evening Post.

—That romantic story about the fatal mission of Congressman J. E. Leonard to Cuba, to find his sweetheart, is denied by the Washington Post, which declares that he went to Havana to break off his engagement with a girl there, so as to be free to press his suit with a Washington belle. The Post also hints that he feared he might be poisoned by a Cuban rival.

—A little girl of Conoholoucken, Conn., was playing with a cat, one day recently, when she was slightly scratched by the animal. Her brother was ill with scarlet fever, and she took the disease. Instead of the eruption coming out naturally, it seemed to settle in the trifling wound which the cat had inflicted. Gangrene set in, and the little one suffered greatly, and was finally relieved by death.

—A couple of constables, while serving process near the City of Belleview, Ill., a few days ago, were attacked by an infuriated sow, and were compelled to seek safety in the friendly branches of a neighboring tree. The animal stood sentry for two hours at the foot of the tree, when it quietly walked away. As soon as her scowlship was out of sight the frightened officers of the law descended and rapidly left the neighborhood.

—We have here in Hart County, Ky., a man by the name of William Howman, who was thrown away in the Apalache Mountains, N. C., when an infant, and was found by an old bear and adopted as a cub. At the age of about ten years he was captured, tied hand and foot, and then his captors found that he could not talk, nor could he be persuaded to take any food but milk, which he sucked from a bottle, showing that he had lived solely from the nursing of the bear. Bowman is now a farmer near Omega, and anyone doubting the truth of this statement can have it verified by seeing him.—Hart Co. (Ky.) Three Springs.

—In the town of Cicero, eight miles from Syracuse, N. Y., a few evenings ago, Lora L. Edden, aged forty-six years, murdered her mother, aged eighty years, by stabbing her in the back with a jack-knife. They had lived together for several years, but did not agree. The daughter had beaten her mother on several occasions, and on the evening in question, while eating dinner, she picked a quarrel with her mother and abused her. Finding that she could not break the old woman's spirit she seized a jack-knife and stabbed her in the back under the shoulder blade, inflicting a wound from which she soon died. The daughter does not show any regret at what she has done.

—An extraordinary instance of true love comes over the hill from the Poor-House at Liberty, Ind. For some time a woman, aged seventy-eight years, has been confined there as a pauper. Employed as a farm hand, a young man, aged about twenty-six, has been connected with the institution. This young man was in the habit of carrying wood for the old lady's fire and paying other attentions to her. A few days ago the keeper was informed by the young man that it was his intention to marry the old lady. Notwithstanding the keeper's protestations and advice, the affair was consummated, and the loving couple are living together as happy as two turtle doves in mating season.

The Courage of Women.

It is common to think and not uncommon to speak of women as the timid sex, and they are likely to afford in a good deal of amusement and not a little gallant dissatisfaction by reason of their supposed timidity. Men like to think of them as precious cowards, and often say that fearlessness is a masculine virtue which it would be unfortunate and unattractive for a woman to possess. They accordingly enjoy her susceptibility to fright, for it often yields them an opportunity to act as her protector at very small expense of spirit. They cannot be with her very long or very much without finding occasion to show their superiority of nerve by presenting a bold front to a staggering drunkard, or by striking from her garments a whirring insect, that has mistaken them. The climax of man seems braver generally than the bravest woman, so that he who is not a wife is very easy to convince appear to be such in her presence—one of the many causes, perhaps, of his fondness for her society.

A woman is accustomed to think of herself as timorous, just as a man is to think of himself as valiant. She has no shame in her avowal of fear, and is rather insistent than otherwise in exaggerate her fear, imagining, from what men have told her, that her femininess and liveliness depend somewhat on its degree, at least on its exhibition. She is so easily and constantly alarmed at trifles that she expects to be beside herself when some great danger threatens. And when it threatens, she is not to be surprisingly calm and self-collected. Startled by a beetle, frightened by a yow, ready to swoon at sight of blood, she despises death when it menaces those she loves, and under its very shadow is as composed as need be. She seldom believes herself free from fear, even though she be the embodiment of heroism, and refers to the scenes through which she has so nobly passed as shocking and terrible. Looking back, her imagination is far more excited by the retrospect than her mind was by the experience, and she wonders how she could have lived through it all. Indeed, her timidity is almost always before and after the actual danger, which, confronted, face to face, is shorn of most of its power to terrify. Her nerves and her imagination recede much more sensitive, sympathetic and active in time than they are; she is scared by anticipation of, and at a distance from, a peril rather than by peril itself.

With man it is generally different. His nerves, sensibilities and imagination are usually tame compared with hers. He is stronger, better disciplined, more experienced; he is not constitutionally timid; he has, from his very sex, far less cause to fear; he is taught from his earliest consciousness that faint-heartedness of any kind is immunity, discreditable, even disgraceful. He is educated to courage, he believes that he possesses it, and if he have any suspicion to the contrary, he would never acknowledge it, for confession of cowardice is confession of ignominy. Nevertheless, in the presence of imminent danger, at the approach of death, he not infrequently shames his pretensions and his sex, and reveals a shudding ignorance of himself. Neither his will nor his pride will serve him; his nerves prove weak on supreme trial, and he palpably cowers before calamity. He falls far below woman. While she remains steady and tranquil, he is unsettled and pusillanimous. Such instances may be deemed exceptional, though they are not uncommon. It may be said that woman, as a rule, is more afraid of remote and possible than of near and real danger, while the converse is true of man, as continual examples bear witness.

A just distinction between the sexes may be that man is the braver, woman the more courageous of the two. Courage is the higher quality, since it is mental and moral instead of physical, as bravery is prone to be. Bravery is indifferent to danger through ignorance or through temperament; courage sees and feels all the danger, and may exaggerate it, yet conquers apprehension, preparing and prepared by a sort of spiritual exaltation and by wholly determined purpose to meet the worst that may come. The former is often a accident of blood; the latter is a capacity of the soul, the evidence of latent if not of conspicuous heroism. Woman always sees so much more peril than there actually is, that, if man should see what she sees, he would rarely stand firm. If he were one-quarter as afraid as she is, his intrepidity and achievement would be far more seldom sung.

A distinguished trait of women in general is fortitude, which is the better and nobler—yes, the essential—part of courage. Man has comparatively a slender stock. He shrinks from and complains bitterly of pain that they bear without a murmur, with perfect resignation, without a thought of doing aught save their duty. He is peevish, querulous, unjust, well-nigh intolerable during a sickness which they will bear with sweetness, even with grace. Reverse of fortune, calamity, affliction, anguish of body and of mind, the ruin of their last hope, they will sustain with equanimity, when a tithe of their suffering will drive him to lond outcry, to vicious curses or to suicide. They will shiver and shriek when the first wave breaks over the vessel, and go down with her in a hell of waters silent, statue-like and serene. They will stare the devil right at a cry of fire, and perish in the flames like an Indian bound to the stake. They will scream at the prick of a needle and walk placidly to an open grave. Not so bold as man to do wrong, they are more valiant to do right. The timid sex in some things, they are the heroic or heroinic sex in others, and these usually the greater things. In many of the gravest trials of life they are dauntless and distinguished, when man, their boasted superior, is craven and abject.—Harper's Bazar.

The Northeastern Railway Company in England was recently sued by a chimney sweep for breach of contract in refusing to carry him as a passenger. The defendants argued that the sweep would have been a nuisance to the other passengers, or to inter two others who might occupy his seat. But it was to an empty carriage that the sweep was refused admission, and the Judge held that the annoyance must be to persons who were actually fellow-passengers, and that no account could be taken of persons who might subsequently enter the car. The law applies equally to millers; and it is suggested that separate compartments should be provided for all persons the color of whose clothing is of a transferable nature.

"Every cloud has a silver lining." But that is no consolation after all, when you reflect that things are never worn with the lining side out.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

An Interesting Rencontre.

"Now, in Silverton, Nev., we used to—"

"Silverton?"

"Yes."

"Nevada?"

"Yes."

"Well, you're the first man I've seen from Silverton in a coon's age. I left there six years ago; left my wife there."

"I went there nearly six years ago."

Such was the passage in a conversation going on between two strangers taking a meal in a Utah restaurant, which attracted the attention of myself, eating at a different table.

The man latest from Silverton was a short, stout, sandy-looking man, with beard closely cropped, and a scar beginning, as I supposed, somewhere in the hair of his head, thence running down the forehead along to the right of the nose, making nicks in the lower part of the nose and in the lips, then disappearing in the beard of the chin. It looked as if some one had started to skin him, and gave it up on the offer of a better job. The other man was tall, long-spoken, nervous and dark-looking, with beard stricken with gray, and he would have been cross-eyed if he had had two eyes, as it was, his one eye was set crossing.

"Oh, pretty well."

"Anybody there?"

"A few old fellows sticking to claims that they think there's something in. They'll stay till Gabriel's trump races them out."

"Did you know Tom Stemmons?"

"Yes; killed himself drinking whisky."

"What became of John Littlefield?"

"Jesse Lawler killed him in a fight over the Sweetly-dreaming claim."

"Reckon Sandy Jones ain't there now?"

"Sold out of the Bet-Your-Boots for forty thousand and went back to Pike."

"Dick Brannigan made money there?"

"Yes; but he's dead—whisky got him."

"Did Barry Martin get rid of his money?"

"Yes; went to the Black Hills; got killed by the Sioux."

"Did his brother Thad go?"

"He went; made a big fortune out of the placers; is a Member of Congress now."

proceeded the one-eyed man.

"Wonder what became of Pat Fyburn, that ran a saloon there—the Angelico?"

"He's a banker in San Francisco."

"John Bingham had a bank in Silverton; where's he banking now?"

"He's herding sheep for Tommy Pugmire, on Mud Lake."

"Tommy, the boothlack?"

"The same; he got feet in the Sweet-By-and-By, and sold for twenty thousand."

"Did you know the Sinper boys?"

"Well; Harry Sinper is the Co. in Blasdale & Co., a mercantile firm in Rong Kong, China. Luke Sloper killed a Chinaman in Stagtown, and got six months in the Carson Penitentiary. Long sentence jist for killing a Chinaman. He'll be pardoned out, though. Lige Sloper got into a shootin scrimmage with Montana Jack, and killed him. Lige afterward went to the Arkansas Hot Springs; he was not very well."

"Where did Charley Madden go?"

"Dead."

"Why, he was a stout, healthy-looking man."

"Whisky;"

"Charley's wife and mine," continued the tall stranger, "were great cronies. My wife, somehow, never liked my name; heard she changed her part of it soon as I left, and in a few months married without a divorce under her new name; married a fellow named Scraggs."

"Scraggs?"

"Scraggs."

Ahem—ah—water, another cup of coffee. Suppose you know Charley's brother-in-law, listen Louis, that hangs out in the brewery business?" said the sandy-looking man.

"First-rate; where's he?"

"He's in Silverton's colony, Arizona. Got a big brewery there."

"Remember Alf Sykes?" said the stranger with the one eye set crossing.

"Heard Ward Smithers had come to trouble?"

"Five years at Carson for robbing Wells-Fargo. He didn't play it fine like they say old Bilvens did; I believe that was his name—nickname, I guess."

"Old Bilvens?"

"Old Bilvens. You see he rubbed Wells-Fargo, just out of Silverton; that was before I went there—heard of it because the passenger was the only witness against him, and on the morning of the day of the trial the messenger was found shot dead at the door of the room in which he slept, and which opened on a narrow alley. It was not known for certain who did it, but the Vigilantes suggested to Old Bilvens that perhaps his health would be benefited by a change of climates."

"Old Bilvens!" said the dark stranger, with an expression of countenance which showed that he thought he was looking the shortest man square in the face:

"What might your name be?"

"Name? My name—is—Scraggs. Yours?"

"Old Bilvens."

The Small Arts of Living.

HARDLY anything is too small to spoil the comfort of life, if it be misplaced. A speck in the eye, a kernel of wheat in the boot, a pin-point touching the skin, a band too tight or a pleated strap gone, and good-by comfort!

Considering how much depends on our daily food, it is surprising how little is thought of the conditions under which it is taken, in many families. Some people think a good deal more of what is on the table than what is said or done around it; and some few, perhaps, reverse the order—an operation that may do very well for special occasions, when what is said is something extraordinary, but one that we shall not suggest a nest in the branches of a simple tree. The female bird scarcely has time to warm her abode before a lot of small sue in the designs and colors nest for ladies. Few damask parasols are shown at present, and the styles generally are less ornamental than they were last year.—Harper's Bazar.

Parental Sympathy.

The Illustrated Christian Weekly is of opinion that parental sympathy, rightly exercised and with the child, sharing the child's joys and sorrows, is one of the most potent influences for good in the family government. A family may be under strict discipline without it, certainly. The home may become under the reign of a stern wife a little corner of order and quiet. There is obedience because the strong hand of the law is feared, but it is not obedience in the best sense. The usual result is that the moment the opportunity is presented the yoke will be thrown off, and the newfound liberty will probably degenerate into license. The Weekly proceeds: "We are no advocates of loose government. We believe most profoundly that if parents were more positive in securing obedience from their children, there would be less lawlessness in the State. But we know also that the two things can go together. There can be firm family government and at the same time true parental sympathy. It is vastly better to rule by love than by law. The law must be invoked sometimes; its penalties must be inflicted. But, as for us, give us love, give us sympathy as the agencies of our home government rather than law. Law, by all means; obedience. But secure obedience by that fellow-feeling with your child. Then have your obedience from the heart and not from slavish fear. Then you have obedience not only to positive commands, but even to unspoken wishes. Then you have obedience—the best there can be."

The English Sparrow.

The controversy with regard to the belligerent nature of the English sparrow has not yet been settled definitely. The February Naturalist contained a note by Prof. S. S. Haldeman, stating that for about forty years the Pewee Flycatcher, or common Phœbe-bird, had nested under his portico. In 1877 the English Sparrow appeared on the premises, and "not only attacked the resisting Pewees during several days, when these were repairing their nest, but, as fast as one party built, the other demolished, tearing the nest to pieces, and littering the porch below, without removing or occupying the premises." The March number of the same magazine contains a communication, bearing similar testimony, from Dr. W. F. Hoffman, of Reading, Pa., who says: "In 1874 I occupied a sleeping apartment, about eight or ten feet from the windows of which a pair of robins had constructed a nest in the branches of a maple tree. The female had scarcely time to warm her abode before a lot of sparrows came, and during the males the former was vanquished and driven away. The nest was then pulled up and mutilly also pecked. In the spring of 1875 a pair of robins came (and I doubt not but that they were the same) and repaired the debris which had been pretty well settled during the winter and commenced the construction of another nest. This time they were undisturbed until after the eggs had been deposited. I commenced to feel more secure for my little neighbors, as my apartment was of short duration. About a week had elapsed when the sparrows made another attack. Really conquering their opponents and driving them away. They tore the nest into one mass of rubbish, when all but one pair retired, which then worked an entrance, and fitted it up, where they remained until two broods were hatched."

Parasols.

The new parasols prepared for spring have round tops instead of the pointed canopy top of last summer. They are of medium size—measuring about eighteen inches down the rib, which is slightly smaller than they have been of late. The sticks are long and slender, and the top piece is of simple shape, and only two and a half inches in height. Black and beige colors are used. The favorite material is the soft twilled silk called Lavantine, and also pongees. Most parasols are lined with silk of a contrasting color to the outside color; the lining is kept separate on the outside, and its edges are picked. The seams are strengthened and scallops bound securely, and in the indentation between the scallops is a loop and end of ribbon or ribbon fringe. Others are trimmed with plain silk fringe, and some with wholesome fringe. A long-handled bow for the top is fastened very securely. Black Levantine parasols lined with white, cream-color or parasol-spun are very handsome when finished with wholesome fringe. The steamer end and the plain ebony sticks are very much admired. Buckle, red and yellow bamboo sticks lacquered with gold are imported from Japan. Some of the dull unpolished ebony handles are quite handsome. Some are for the end, or a hook, and are inlaid with ivory or pearl. Many yellow ivory and pearl handles are shown with silver or gold tips. There are also carnelian, amber and natural wood handles. Sun umbrellas for the most fashionable are made without the silver ring and tips that formerly held the ribs close to the stick; the ribs of paragon frames are now covered with the lining and in a way that makes them remain close to the handle without needing the ring. Paragon frames are of small size in the designs and colors nsed for ladies. Few damask parasols are shown at present, and the styles generally are less ornamental than they were last year.—Harper's Bazar.

Vegetine

I Will Try Vegetine.
He Did
AND WAS CURED.

BELFAST, ME., Feb. 16, 1877.

MR. H. R. STEVENS:

Dear Sir: I wish to give you this testimony, that you may know, and let others know, what Vegetine has done for me. About two years ago I had all sore cause on my leg. Had to have a large piece, or foundation, cut out. Was confined to the house about six months. Was under the care of two physicians. All this time I was growing over my leg. Was discharging a large amount of matter. Was confined to my bed most of the time. Was under the care of physicians, getting medicine, etc., but to no avail. Was finally induced to try Vegetine. I had used but four bottles when I began to feel better. I kept on using it and am now able to attend to business. I have used about four bottles of it in all, and can truly say that it is the best medicine I ever used. I always keep a bottle of it in the house now. It is a most excellent medicine. Very respectfully yours,

F. ANTHONY.

MR. ANTHONY is one of the pioneers of Belmont, Waldo County, having settled there in 1804. He is a wealthy gentleman, of the highest standing in the community, and the above statement can be relied upon as strictly true. Vegetine is for sale by all druggists.

VEGETINE
CURED HER.

DORCHESTER, MASS., June 11, 1877.

MR. STEVENS:

Dear Sir: I feel that it is my duty to say what I have found to be a most excellent medicine. I was troubled with a humor in my blood, which caused me to be very weak and run down. I had also been troubled with Dyspepsia for a long time. I had taken many different kinds of medicine, but found no relief until I commenced taking Vegetine. I have taken about two bottles of it, and am now in good health. I have also given it to my children for Scrofula, and it has done them much good. I feel that it is the best medicine for the blood that I have ever taken. Yours truly, MRS. ELIZA A. HOWARD.

VEGETINE
Is Better Than Any MEDICINE.

HENDERSON, KY., Dec. 1877.

I have used H. R. STEVENS' VEGETINE for the past twelve years and pronounce it the best medicine I have ever used. It is the only medicine I have used that has done me any permanent good. Of other medicines I have taken I could say much.

MRS. LYNN, Gardenia, Ky.

VEGETINE is composed of Roots, Barks, and Herbs. It is very pleasant to take; every child likes it.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Going into debt in many cases is a fatal calamity. Thousands of farmers are now being sacrificed for debt, and their owners are sinking into the ranks of the irretrievably poor.

—Let's all try to sell young cattle for what will improve the soil unless we are sure of a price that will make all good. Let us remember the good rule, "No manure, no crops; no cattle, no manure."—Vermont Chronicle.

—Soft Gingerbread.—Three pints flour, one cupful beef suet chopped fine, one teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful ginger, four two eggs, add one pint molasses, one cupful brown sugar, one and a half teaspoonfuls soda, dissolved in water, stirred in half a pint sour milk or buttermilk thoroughly; add oil to flour while still and bake in good oven; put cake in sponge-cake pans.

—Make up your mind what you intend to do. Sit down and count the cost. Then if the undertaking does pay you can persevere. It is always to your interest that you are not able to finish in the season. Many a farmer has been more by getting behindhand with his spring work than would buy another team, and has at any rate been more than would pay the wages of a man for a year. This once in our own experience. Have you not found it so?—Prairie Farmer.

—In the laundry horax is economical, as it saves both labor and soap, and is more healthful than either. Flannels and blankets and other large articles it is especially valuable, and in all cases the use of a little borax will save half the labor when articles are much soiled. It is perfectly effectual in driving away red ants, cockroaches, etc., if sprinkled around in cupboards, or put in small quantities on paper and placed in the runways of insects. Borax is also of great value for toilet uses. For removing dandruff and cleansing the hair it is unequaled. It is also a good remedy for rough face and chapped hands. Its application on fresh cuts, bruises, sprains, etc., proves very salutary, and is often the only remedy required, even in severe cases.—Christian Advocate.

—The pantry-shelves are getting grimy, and paper-cranks around the door-latches and knobs are looking dark and unsightly. For lack of time they are left day after day, for it is hard work to take the dishes and the wears off the paint, too. The husband keeps his bottle of oil, or perhaps a gallon can holds it, for he never stints in the use of anything; also he has the bottle of spirits of ammonia to use; she takes her basin of water and a clean cloth, puts in a few drops of the fluid and wipes off all the dirt; it is worth more than a half day's labor, and does not hurt the paint, either. She could get along with less water, and see how easily the dishes could be cleaned; a few drops on a sponge would suffice to remove all the settling-room, making them shine like crystal. It would take the stains from the fingers, too, and a teaspoonful in the mop pail would do more toward washing up the kitchen floor than ten times as much soap applied to the mop-handle. A housewife has just as much right to make her work easy and expeditious as her husband has. She does not, as a rule, do half the work, from the end, or a hook, and are inlaid with ivory or pearl. Many yellow ivory and pearl handles are shown with silver or gold tips. There are also carnelian, amber and natural wood handles. Sun umbrellas for the most fashionable are made without the silver ring and tips that formerly held the ribs close to the stick; the ribs of paragon frames are now covered with the lining and in a way that makes them remain close to the handle without needing the ring. Paragon frames are of small size in the designs and colors used for ladies. Few damask parasols are shown at present, and the styles generally are less ornamental than they were last year.—Harper's Bazar.

Washing and Shearing Sheep.

Indiscriminate washing of sheep previous to shearing, unless they really want it or not, is now going out of fashion. The wool, no matter how cleanly washed, will not be used by the manufacturer without a thorough scouring, and it is now a settled thing with many intelligent farmers that the few cents a pound extra had washed wool will bring will not compensate for the cost of the labor of washing and shearing the sheep, and the extra wear and tear on the machinery in wash them. Only those sheep the fleeces of which are soiled with mud or dung are now washed.

Shearing, to the onlooker, is a very simple affair. But even the most experienced shearers are liable to cut the sheep occasionally, and the less perversely sheep can cut, how easy it is to snip out about a pound of mutton, and how different! Such a balance in favor of shearing on one extra pound of wool. When, too, hogs had a fair trial of strength with animal fats, he will begin to wonder if there is not some money in them, as he sees the "old hand" coolly snipping away, the sheep lying contentedly or getting up after a few futile kicks. It will be with the shears can only be acquired by practice, and the best school is a ranch a skillful operator and acquire the trick from him.—Country Gentleman.

Shearing Sheep.

As to where the shears are to be first inserted and how the shearer is to hold his sheep, are points for the shearer to decide. Usually, the first cut the fleece be always taken off as an entirety, with exception of some of the belly and legs. It is said that the wool is not to pierce nor bruised by cutting twice in the same place. Each stroke with the shears should be clear and complete and made close to the body. It is a mistake to make, for it is an utility to do it for to leave a tuft inch of wool at that spot, you get it neat shearing, and if cut now it will be too short to be of any use to the manufacturer, and will only injure in his estimating the parcel of wool in which it is discovered.

In cutting off the neck of shearing the fleece is of special importance to open the wool, let the shears be worked in gradually, cutting the wool of an even plane close to the skin until they are in and underneath the wool as far as they will go, then raise them, tearing the fleece open. Thus, commence at the point of the shoulder, working up toward the head. This prevents cutting the staple along the neck and makes a better job. In shearing on the floor a man has better control of his sheep. If shearing on a bench, catch the sheep by the left hind-leg, back it toward the bench, and roll it over thereon; set it up on its butt, and then, as you stand with your left foot on the bench, lay the sheep's neck across your left knee, with his right side against your body; now take the two fore-legs under your left arm, and begin about the center of the belly and open the fleece fore and aft. Shear what would be the left side of the belly if the sheep were on his feet, also the left side of the brisket. Now cut off all tags from the inside of the hind legs, and shear the breech as far as you can reach in this position. Return to the point of the shoulder, going up under the wool with the shears as above described, but out of the way, now shear around, taking off the fleece as an entirety and inspecting the forelop clear around the neck.

You will proceed thus down the left side, taking the belly by the wool, and shearing as far around the sheep as practicable while holding it in the position described, which will be two or three inches past the spine. On reaching the hind-leg, say about the stifle, you will then insert the shears at an inside of the hocks (wool below that point is commonly tags) and shear around the leg back to where you left the shear on the brisket. Should the sheep persist in kicking at this stage, place the palm of your left hand on the stifle-joint, which causes the leg to lie quite straight. Bring your attention to the breech or the piece shorn when working on the belly taggings, and go clear around past the tail, so that, were the sheep standing on his feet, everything on the left side, including one to three inches of the back-fold from the spine, from head to tail and including the whole tail, shall be shorn.

Now, taking the left hind leg (the one that is shorn) in your left hand, swing the sheep around with its spine directly toward you, being careful that some of the fleece goes under him, for his left hip bone, which is shorn and bare, now comes in contact with the cords, causing him to lie unsteady. Now return with the shears to the head or neck and go down the right side (the "shearing side," as it is called), taking in the two legs and right hand side of the brisket and belly. How may now finish up, trimming off any tags that may have escaped, inspecting that wool on the legs below the knee and hock joints. Now see that the fleece is all clear from the sheep, and let the mutton go. Next gather up all bits of fleece and tags together with the fleece itself, and give them to the person who is to tie and bind.

If the door and bench round about be clean, proceed to watch another sheep; if they be not clean and if any accumulation be passed, it is to be taken up and thrown out of the pen. It will be seen by this description that the wool all the part of the operation will hang down and have a tendency to fall apart. This is counteracted in a great measure if the sheep be shorn on the floor than on a bench, for, though the same manner of opening up and shearing is pursued, still as the shearer goes around he has the sheep's flies on the opposite side, and the direction from the point of the fleece is not so great as where the sheep lits "up on end."—Ohio Farmer.

From Springvale.

SATURDAY, April 15, 1878.

As previously announced the Farmers Union Literary and Agricultural Society met at the School house in District No. 2 Springvale Township.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Immediately after the names of T. J. Cushman and Mrs. Carrie Smith were handed in, they wishing to become members. The votes were cast and the majority were in their favor.

The reading of the paper then occupied a short time. The paper was quite interesting, and was listened to with considerable attention. A motion was made and carried that our paper be called "The Homestead Journal."

Next was a speech by Mr. Hamilton on gardening which way very edifying and instructive.

Also a speech by Mr. Niles on select reading, and I think nearly all will agree that his opinion in regard to the matter is nearly correct. He gave some good advice in regard to laying proper reading before the young, and the folly of the light reading that is so much circulated at the present day.

A motion was made that the members take paine to note the time of the moon when planting and report the same. Motion carried.

A motion was made and supported that the Editress use her own discretion in selecting from our paper what she deemed suitable for publication. Carried.

Motion made that the Editress draw from the treasurer 25 cts. for expenses. Motion carried.

A committee of three were chosen to make out a programme for next meeting, and as a result the following programme was produced. Essay by Mr. A. Worden; Essay or speech on Flower Culture by Mrs. T. B. Hamilton; Select reading by Mrs. Bixby; Speech by Mr. S. B. Thatcher.

A motion was made to purchase a book for the Secretary in which to record the proceedings of the club. Motion carried.

Motion made that the next meeting be held at the Greenwood School house in Bear Creek township on the Saturday before the full moon in the month of May. Carried.

On motion the society adjourned.

EMMA F. SHERMAN, Secretary.

The National Republican Congressional Committee, consisting of one member from each State and Territory, was organized at Washington last week. Hon. Jay A. Hubbell, Representative from this District, was selected for the Michigan member by the Michigan delegation in Congress. Mr. Hubbell held the same position during the last campaign.

A LION HUNT.

Captain Clifford and Gen. Smith Killed Two Lions.

From a Helena Montana, paper we take the following particulars of a lion hunt, in which Capt. Clifford was the principal actor. To the people of this section this will be of interest as Capt. Clifford is as well known here as he is at his post of duty;

Captain Clifford of Camp Baker, with an escort of five soldiers, accompanied by Gen. A. J. Smith and Surveyor Kellogg, camped at White Sulpher Springs last Wednesday evening, en route to Camp Baker. Captain Clifford had been looking out a road and taking military observations through the Muscleshell country. He traveled down as far as the forke of the Muscleshell, but saw no Indians save a few belonging to Bitter Root, who were returning from their annual hunt on the Yellowstone.

A LION HUNT.

While on the Muscleshell the party ran across the trail of a couple of lions. It was royal game, and Captain Clifford, one of the best shots in the mountains and a fearless hunter, proposed they would give chase, so which Smith and Kellogg willingly assented. A short, swift ride and the tawny king of the mountains was visible, striding lazily along for the foot hills, and a few yards to the left was his royal mate, keeping equal pace. The three hunters immediately dismounted and started for their game; at the same time the lions sighted the eager pursuers and turned at bay, disdaining to fly, and by the slow, graceful curving of their tails and low deep growl, told the hunters that if their first shots failed it would be no child's play; but they were steady nerves that held the rifles, and the aims were cool and fatal. At the first fire both lions fell dead—Captain Clifford killing one and Gen. Smith the other. Kellogg made a "close call" for one of them. Lions are said to be numerous in the vicinity of Copperopolis, but killing one is a rare occurrence, and we believe this is the first time two have been killed together. The party also killed five antelope, and saw herds in the valley ranging in number from 100 to 800. Game is quite numerous in that region. I saw the lions' skins at Captain Clifford's camp, and they are trophies, measuring nine feet from tip to tip.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage dated the 17th day of December, A. D. 1874, made and executed by Mary Ann Camp, to Newton A. Balch, of Charlevoix County, Mich., and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1874, in Liber one of Mortgages, on page 264, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said Newton A. Balch to Lydia Smith and Rachel S. Smith, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the 3d day of February, 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan aforesaid, in Liber One of Mortgages, on page 425, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two Hundred and Sixteen Dollars and thirty-three cents, and an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for in said Mortgage, and no proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided; Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 18th day of May, A. D. 1878, at two o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with seven per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for therein; the premises being described in said mortgage as the south half of the north west quarter of Section Fourteen (14) in Township Thirty-two (32) North, of Range Five (5) West, containing Eighty (80) acres, per United States survey.

LYDIA SMITH,
RACHEL S. SMITH,
Assignees of Mortgage.

OLD MISSION NURSERY

Apple Trees $8 per 100.

For 30 days I will sell a block of apple trees at the Nursery that are too large to box, or bundle, at the low price of $8 per 100. Bring your spade and help dig and select to suit yourself.

I will furnish teams to deliver at the dock free of charge.

I have an immense stock of extra fine 3 and 4 years old apple trees of all the leading hardy varieties which I will sell at $15 per 100 bundled and delivered at the boat. I send out none but sound large thrifty trees, six to seven feet high.

This nursery had no connection with the interior stock delivered around the country a few years ago by one Adams.

I have more good trees than all other nurseries together in the Traverse region and will sell as low at any time as good trees can be grown for.

Address C. P. AVERY,

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie E. Heyes may be appointed executor thereof. Therefore, it is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, there to be holden, at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix SENTINEL, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

Our Candidate for Congress.

The Ninth Congressional District has been represented for nearly six years by a man who has not only faithfully and efficiently looked after the affairs of his constituency, but has proven himself a giant in an assembly where pigmies are notably conspicuous.

Jay A. Hubbell's ability is of an order that commands attention and brings results in any cause in which it is put forth, and his record does not need an apology. He is the one who, among the entire Michigan Congressional delegation, was selected as a member of the National Republican Committee, twice in succession.

His views upon National finances are eminently sound, and his utterances upon this question have had more influence in Congress than those of any other member of the House. The fact has been developed at Washington, and is very generally conceded that his financial scheme will be adopted before Congress adjourns, as his plan takes away, practically, every objection to and destroys the force of every argument against resumption, for the reason that resumption will immediately take place the moment this measure is adopted. It is an acknowledged fact that Secretary Sherman is indebted to him for every essential idea in the plan which he laid before the Senate Committee a short time ago, and which forms the basis of the measure under consideration by that committee, and soon to be introduced in that body.

Every consideration which can be named in connection with the interests of the District demand that Mr. Hubbell be continued as our representative. If it is a good rule that business men should give the preference to tried, trusty and experienced agents, it is a better one that public affairs should be intrusted to men who possess these requisites.

The only reason existing why Mr. Hubbell should be displaced is that sectional and personal ambition must be gratified, and the eloquent Generals and Colonels of the southern portion of the District given an opportunity to display their slumbering powers.

We are confident that Mr. Hubbell will again be the choice of the Republicans of this portion of the District.

Smith, Garrett Ackert.

A. E TURNER, of the Grand Rapids Eagle, was tried at Petoskey, on Tuesday, on the charge of violating the game law by shooting pigeons on their nests. The jury acquitted him of the charge. It hardly seemed credible that a veteran sportsman, like Mr. Turner, would be guilty of the conduct charged, and we are glad to record his acquittal.

The Harbor Bill Passed the House—Charlevoix O. K.

The River and Harbor Bill passed the House of Representatives on the 23d in which Charlevoix receives $12,000. The bill has yet to pass the Senate and receive the President's signature, of which there is little doubt

Volume X., No. 1.

Something over nine years ago the SENTINEL timidly sent forth its first issue. From that time to this, with the exception of one issue, its weekly publication has been uninterrupted, and today it presents to its readers the first number of its tenth volume under the same management which almost a decade ago found it it

We say it not boastingly, yet we say it, that the SENTINEL has since its first number been the right arm of the Pine Lake region, and in times past, when labor was needed more than now, it has struck many hard blows in the interest of Charlevoix county. It possesses testimonials of popular appreciation of its work, and its present firm establishment is a testimonial which is more substantial than all others, and testifies in unmistakable terms to public favor.

The type, presses and material of the SENTINEL belong to us; but its services, good words and watchful attention belong to the people who have watered its roots and nurtured it life until it is now able to bid the winds blow and the waves dash.

The SENTINEL thanks its patrons for what it has received as their hands, and steps out into the new volume upon solid footing, and with a clear sky overhead.

CHARLEVOIX AS A BUSINESS CENTER.—Daily it becomes more apparent that the area of country of which Charlevoix is the natural business center, is rapidly on the increase. Almost daily we meet strange vehicles and strange faces, which hail from adjoining towns and counties. It is becoming evident to all who reside within a radius of twenty miles to the south and south-east that Charlevoix is the most accessible point for them to do their marketing and buying, and advantageous in many other regards, and our merchants bear testimony to a growing trade from that locality. The section of country of which we speak is by far the most extensively developed of any which is tributary to this place, and is quite as naturally dependent upon Charlevoix for marketing facilities as any portion of the lake region.

In the past farmers have found it difficult to dispose of their grain here for cash, and the reasons have been obvious. The necessity has been observed, and will hereafter be supplied. This want once met, there is no obstacle in the way of Charlevoix becoming the principal grain center of even more than the Pine Lake region, and, as a matter of course, the principal trading point.

Our facilities for shipping cheaply, and our easy accessibility from all points in the interior are sure indicators of all we have predicted.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 9th, a bill was reported from the Finance Committee and placed on the calendar to repair and put in operation the mint at New Orleans. Mr. Sherman stating that it was the opinion of the committee that the would afford all the necessary additional mint facilities. A bill was passed to provide a code of army regulations. Conference Committees were appointed on the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks, and on the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill. The Pacific Railroad Funding bill was again taken up and an amendment offered by Mr. Blaine was rejected—yeas, 29; nays, 36. Mr. Thurman's amendment providing for the redemption of United States land bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury was adopted. Several other proposed amendments were withdrawn, and the bill was passed—41 to 19. In the House, a resolution of inquiry was offered relative to the cause of the present business distress throughout the country, and directing the Secretary of War to report to Congress at the beginning of next month the amount of fractional currency now in circulation, as at the earliest moments, and reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency a resolution declaring that the Secretary of Treasury notes for the redemption of National Bank notes, which are to be issued in pursuance of the act of last session, shall have been duly taken up in accordance with the provisions of said act, and cancelled and destroyed. Mr. Wood, from the Ways and Means Committee, spoke at length in favor of the bill, and while admitting that it did not go far enough, announced the fact that he would be glad to support it. The bill was then passed by a vote of 160 yeas to 80 nays, and at 4 o'clock the House adjourned. On the 10th, the Senate resumed the consideration of the Funding bill, and Mr. Garland objected to its reception at this time, when a motion was made to take a recess, which motion was lost by a vote of 25 to 29. The bill was then taken up, and Mr. Bayard addressed the Senate in opposition to the measure. The bill was then passed—yeas, 39; nays, 28. Mr. Thurman's amendment providing for the redemption of United States land bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury was adopted. Several other proposed amendments were withdrawn, and the bill was passed—41 to 19. In the House, a resolution was offered and referred providing for the payment of the Revolutionary claims of Virginia. Bills were introduced to prevent the issue of fractional currency; to provide for the payment of the public debt; to repeal the resumption act;

OUR RADIX LETTER

New York, April 26, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

After a partial and troubled slumber of two or three years the Beecher scandal has surprised the uninitiated and disgusted everybody by waking up and thrusting itself afresh upon society. As this is just the sort of news which flies on the wings of the wind to even the furthest and most obscure corners of the land, it would be unreasonable to suppose that any of your readers are unacquainted with the fact that Mrs. Tilton has re-confessed apparently with all earnestness and solemnity. I was apprised of the coming publication of her letter in advance of its appearance, and was told to look out for a tremendous social convulsion when the thunderbolt should fall. Up to date, however, the social convulsion has not been visible, but only the weariness and disgust which I have alluded to. The trouble is that the unfortunate Mrs. T has heretofore proved herself so void of moral sense and any respect for the truth, that it is generally taken for granted that she is falsifying whenever she opens her mouth. There are those, of course, who believe her statements, but only those who have believed them all along. One reason given for this confession is that it is only a necessary preliminary to the reconciliation of Mr. and Mrs. Tilton, which reconciliation is unquestionably probable. However that may be, this episode, including Mr. Beecher's prompt denial of the renewal charge, will strengthen the latter with the majority of people.

There is no doubt that Mrs. Tilton is the victim of a mania or form of insanity well known among the medical profession. Her case is not very different from that of an English lady of noble birth, who, a few years ago, figured in the courts as a result of similar charges which she brought against some of the most prominent men in that country while laboring under just such an hallucination. She is really more to be pitied than blamed, though she is none the less a nuisance on that account.

Poor Tweed is out of jail at last, and beyond all earthly vicissitudes. His death, briefly announced in my last, was quiet and peaceful, but unspeakably sad, as the ending of a life which had great possibilities, but which proved worse than a failure. The family which henceforth must bear alone the disgraced name, were with him in jail at the last moment, evincing the affection and devotion which its members have unvaryingly displayed toward its fallen head. The funeral, which occurred on Wednesday, was private and unobtrusive, and the remains were interred in Greenwood. In regard to this cemetery, there exists an old, almost forgotten law, providing that no person dying in jail shall be buried within its limits; but no attempt was made in this case to enforce its prohibition.

There is no doubt that there are a hundred or so citizens of this State who breathe more freely now that the mouth of the ex-boss is seated for all time. During his life time a sword of Damocles, of varying weight and sharpness, was suspended over the head of each of them. There was no telling at what moment circumstances might occur which would uncover some little affair of bygone years, which one or more of these gentlemen would greatly prefer to have remain bygone. But now the man who alone knew the whole story, and was in a position to tell it, is out of the way, and the uncomfortable many smile a reassured smile and hold up their heads with virtuous stiffness while they piously lament the sins of the dead man.

The death of Col. Hitchcock, commander of our famous Ninth Regiment, furnished occasion this week for a military funeral such as we have not seen before in a good while. The display of the militia with reversed arms, draped flags and funeral music, was magnificent, and the multitudes witnessing it gave Broadway and Fifth Ave. a decided holiday appearance. Col Hitchcock was a popular citizen and officer who especially distinguished himself during the railroad riots last year.

A runaway in New York is a common and usually not a remarkable occurrence; but an accident of this kind took place on Thursday which is well worth mention. On the morning of that day John Strickland, one of P. T. Barnum's oldest and best drivers, took out for exercise his six-horse team hitched to a heavy baggage wagon. The leaders took fright at an elevated railway train, and in a moment the panic-stricken animals started off at ungovernable speed. No human strength could avail to check such a course, so shouting a hurried warning to the bystanders, Strickland gathered the reins and devoted himself with coolness and skill to the desperate task of guiding the team as far as possible to avoid collisions in the hope that they might finally quiet down and be got under control. Instead of this, the horses grew more frantic at every bound, and it was evident that disaster must result. The heavy wagon was provided with a brake which the driver applied with such force as to hold the wheels from revolving, and yet the vehicle seemed no more than a feather to the furious beasts. A long mile they ran, coaches, wagons, and pedestrians scattering like chaff before them, a spectacle that no one who beheld it will be likely to forget, until they reached the Grand Central depot when a wheel caught in a frog of the horse railroad track, snapping the heavy wrought iron axle like a pipe stem. Then as the wagon tipped another wheel was torn off in the same manner and the heroic Strickland whose unflinching courage had saved perhaps a score of lives, was violently thrown to the sidewalk and instantly killed, his head being crushed on the pavement.

Incited to great deeds by O'Leary's unparalleled walk in London, an ambitious pedestrian named Hughes is about to attempt to beat the former's feat of walking 521 miles in six days. $1,000 is wagered that he will cover more than this distance in the time specified, the pedestrian to walk, or run, or both, as he pleases. It is not believed that he will be successful.

Another of the many directions in which physical endurance is tested in these days is dancing against time. We have here a certain dancing-master named Cartier, who had distinguished himself on several occasions in this direction, but who this week surpassed any former efforts by waltzing for six-teen consecutive hours without stopping. Now I know that dancing is usually considered very good fun, but doesn't this particular performance look a little too much like work?

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Hemorrhages, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c; regular [illegible]

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Cold Spring, Putnam County, N. Y., man, has just celebrated, adversely from his standpoint, that he has been leader of the orchestra there for two years.

—A woman employed as a stitcher in a shoe shop in North Adams, Mass., died a few days since from the effect of poison contained in the fancy colored leather on which she worked.

—A man was scared to death in Berryville, Mo. He was passing a graveyard at midnight, when two men sprang from behind a monument and shouted at him. He ran home and went to bed, but was so nervous that he could not sleep, and before morning he died in convulsions.

—An absent-minded man in Monroe, Conn., went to church the other morning with his overcoat, as he supposed, on his arm, but the laughing of the people in church directed his attention to the fact that he had taken his every-day pantaloons, and that the suspenders attached to them were dangling about his legs.

—There was a panic at the Metropolitan Theater, Sacramento, March 14. A boy, who had concealed himself in the loft to witness the play surreptitiously by peeping through the ventilator, made a mistake and forced his leg through the passing large fragments of which fell over the east and lower side of the parquette. The spectators sprang to their feet and began to work their way into the aisles, and toward the doors; but as the whole ceiling did not give way and the small boy was speedily discovered, the panic was soon over and the play went on.

—The other day, as a lady at this city was passing some small boys, one of them opened his hand to display some fine agates to his companions. They looked at them admiringly, and presently one of the boys turning to the fortunate owner said: "I owe you a licking, but give me one of those agates, and I'll call it square." The little fellow looked at the other's face, hesitated a moment, and then, selecting a marble, silently passed it over, after which all the lads went on with their play as if nothing unusual had occurred, the little marble-owner seeming to think the bargain a fair one.—Portland Press.

—At the Skaneateles, N. Y., paper mill, the other day, Miss Sarah Glass was engaged in sweeping about and under machinery which was revolving at a rapid rate, when, by some means unknown, her clothing became entangled in the belting, and for a moment it seemed as if the poor girl was destined to be killed. Her screams attracted the attention of a sister near by, who rushed to the rescue and succeeded in catching her, and by almost herculean strength held the devoted sister in her until the belting had almost torn every particle of clothing off from her. Luckily assistance came and the machinery was stopped, and Miss Glass escaped with some slight bruises, but was badly scared.

Giving Her Census.

When the census-taker rapped at the door of a certain cottage on Crawford street, the other day, and wondered if the woman would ask the dog to bite or douse him with dish-water, a great disappointment awaited him. She opened the door softly, sniffed the air to see if he smelled of lightning-rods, and then threw it open for him to enter.

"Madam, I am making a canvass of the city," he began.

"Ah! Sit down," she replied, and as he began opening his book she continued:

"There are five of us in the family, and we pass right down on this place. My husband's name is Peter, his age is forty-two, and he came from a mean family. His father was always having rawboles about dogs, and his mother was the greatest gossip in Elmira. Have you got that down?"

He grunted "assent, and she continued:

"My name is Alvina Sarah, and I was born—"

"I do not care to know where you was born, madam," he interrupted.

"Well, I care," she exclaimed; "it makes a great deal of difference whether I was born in Africa or Boston, and I want it put down. As I was saying, I was born in Boston in 1838. Pitcher is that I started a quarrel with you?"

"Madam, you don't understand—you—"

"Don't I understand that I came of a good family? I'd like to know of a Boston family which carried their noses higher than the Bogerses! Put down that my father was in the Mexican War."

"You have three children, madam?"

"I haven't a mite of thing, sir! Put down that my mother was killed by an explosion in a quarry. Her and father were—"

"How many children have you, madam?"

"Have you got mother down?"

"No, madam! You see, I am taking the census of the city."

"Well?" she said, giving him a dangerous look, "I had the typhoid fever at the age of fifteen, and for weeks and weeks I hung on the edge of the grave. I born up as well as I was able, and—"

"Five in the family—how many children?" he suddenly asked.

"Put down that I hung up!" she commanded. "And that one night when the watchers were asleep I crept out of bed and took a drink of—"

"This is foreign to the subject, madam. How old are your children?"

"Haven't you put down that I hung on the edge of the grave?"

"No, madam."

"Aren't you going to?"

"No, madam. You see, I am simply taking the census of Detroit. I desire to ascertain—"

"You can't ascertain it here, sir!" she snapped. "If my sickness, which cost over $200, isn't good enough to put in the book then you don't get a line here!"

"Let me ask you—"

"No use asking for any of our photographs, sir! If you get 'em anywhere around, you can't have 'em! Good-day, sir—good-day!"

He stood on the step, sighing, and she called through the door:

"My grandfather was also bitten to death by an alligator, but I won't give you any of the particulars! You want to walk!"

He passed on, sorrowfully wondering if the next woman's mother was blown off a bridge or carried down the river on a hay-stack.—Detroit Free Press.

Pitrified Human Bodies.

Mr. David Whaley, of this place, married his wife in June, 1873, in the cemetery by or of the name. Bought Ritchie. He died recently and was buried on March 30 last, in his father's lot. Last Tuesday the wife's body was taken up and placed beside that of the husband. Beside the undertaker, David Seaman, and his son, there were present Mr. Joseph Ritchie, his brother William H. Ritchie, and Mrs. Joseph Ritchie. They were astonished at the weight of the coffin, and concluded to open it. When the lid was removed they were more astonished to see the face entirely preserved and looking as natural as life. The hair had grown to twice its length at the time of death, and was of a glossy black. The skin was covered with a coating not thicker than a sheet of paper. This coating was hard and white. "You never saw a more whiter," Mr. Ritchie said. The smoothness resembled that of wax, but it was not wax. Nobody touched it except Mr. Seaman, who rested his fingers on the forehead and fancies that the coating gave way slightly beneath his touch, and that if he had pressed hard upon it the forehead might have fallen in. He says the coating was a kind of hard mold. The eyes were as full as in life, as were also the cheeks. The clothes were dotted with black spots, but otherwise well preserved.

Dr. J. H. B. Denton was sent for to examine the remains, but was not at home. They were therefore reinterred. The coffin was of black walnut, and was uninjured, except that the finish on the outside had rotted off. In removing the lid a hammer was used, but the jar did not disturb the appearance of the body. In digging for the coffin young Mr. Seaman dug down through several feet of loam; then he came to a layer of hard, dry clay. He required the use of a pickax to penetrate it; then there was a thin layer of loam. The coffin itself was found in a very fine sand that could hardly be called moist. Underneath it was found the mask of a mole, which was perfectly dry, and perfect in form.—Mrs. Whaley died of consumption.

Mr. Seaman says that two weeks ago he disinterred the body of Washington Cowert, and on the same day those of his grandfather and his brother. All of them had been very large men. Washington Cowert had been buried twelve years; the other two not so long. Their collins were easily removed, but in each case required seven strong men to lift it from the grave, and six of them had all they could do to carry it thirty feet. He had died of consumption after much wasting away, so that he was lighter than either his grandfather or his brother. His coffin was not opened, but Mr. Seaman has no doubt that the body would have been found in a complete state of preservation. His grave was not far from that of Mrs. Whaley.—Freeport (L. I.) Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Of Humble Submission.

REGARD not much who is for thee, or who against thee; do as you ought, thought and care to that God is with thee in everything thou doest.

Have a good conscience, and God will well defend thee.

For whom God will help, no malice of man shall be able to hurt.

If thou canst be silent and suffer, without doubt thou shalt see that the Lord will help thee.

He knoweth the time and the manner to deliver thee, and therefore thou oughtest to resign thyself unto Him.

It belongeth to God to help, and to deliver from all confusion.

It is often very profitable, to keep us more humble, that others know and reckon our faults.

When a man humbleth himself for his failings, then he easily pacifieth others, and quickly satisfieth those that are offended with him.

God protecteth the humble and deliverth him; the humble He loveth and consoleth; unto the humble man He inclineth himself; unto the humble He giveth great grace; and after his humiliation He raiseth him to glory.

Unto the humble He revealeth His secrets, and sweetly draweth and inviteth him unto Himself.

The humble man, though he suffer confusion, yet hath much peace; for that he resteth on God, and not on the world.

Do not think that thou hast made any progress, unless thou esteem thyself inferior to all.—Thomas a Kempis.

Honest Labor.

The artificial nature of much of our society is often discussed, and to its feverish unrest is partly ascribed the absence of those simple habits and plain ways of living which were a distinguishing feature of past generations. When we see men and women marrying to and fro, trying to enjoy in a day what it would have taken their fathers and mothers a week to accomplish, impatiently adopting the latest fashion, no matter how they suffer, simply because they consider themselves bound by the unwritten law, and breathing an atmosphere which is unreal and unhealthy, we are apt to moralize over the change. But what makes the question one of greater moment is that this weakness is not confined alone to adults, but that its influence is rapidly spreading amongst the young, taking away from childhood that free and unrestrained grace of movement, freshness of feeling and simplicity of manner with which poets and idealists have always associated it, and making it confined, stilted and unnatural. It is a necessary sequence that the young should take the example of their elders as a guide. They are imitative from their earliest years; if they have been brought up in rich households they have witnessed nothing but a continual round of pleasure. Their every whim has been gratified and their tastes consulted, and the thought has never entered their minds that there could come a time when they would have to depend upon their own exertions, and when all the fanciful accomplishments which they are possessed of, would stand them in little stead. Various opinions are indulged in as to whether the human race is physically degenerating. There are some who argue, and support their assertions by proof, that we cannot now find those grand specimens of manhood and womanhood which shine in the pages of history and look down on us from the canvas of the painter. On the other hand observation teaches us that there still are to be seen strength and beauty; that men and women are not themselves, and that even if they are hot-house plants, they bear within them a large fund of vitality. But there is something else to be considered besides mere physical strength. We do not want simply to rear a savage race, who will "hurl their lances in the sun and bathe the rainbows of the brooks." An athlete may be ignorant and brutal, a beauty vain and shallow, but when intelligence and stability of character are added to physical charms and powers, the structure is in fault complete.

But we do see, every day, a sad absence of those characteristics which were met with in the men and women who have left the stamp of their greatness upon our country. We need hear of young men who will yet be heirs to fortune taking a position with the common sailors of land, dragging and hauling in the factory, sweating at the forge or following the plow, so that by experience and knowledge of all the details necessary to make up the perfect workman they may be fitted to follow out some honorable vocation in life. Nor do we find young women throwing sandy-their frivolities, settling down to the performance of household duties, and by a thorough course of practical training preparing themselves to rule in the kingdom of home. Nor is this neglect of practical education to be seen only amongst the rich. Even those in humble circumstances have become imbued with the same false ideas as are to what constitutes true dignity. The terms workman and servant are obnoxious to our ears, even although they have been used in the presence of the rich, but there are no deformities in their articles, such as we see in our shops. A person of taste here wonders sometimes that this or that article can find a customer, it is so ungainly, so out of proportion and rough, and yet the thousands of the articles are sold annually. Their forms may be quaint and striking in their novelty, but never do they combine the beauty of utility. They formed or unsightly. The pretty little women found on cheap fans brought here may be compared with those in the even feebleness. We consider it a feature that is beautiful to us, and they do the same, but these pictures no more represent their women than those referred to do ours.—Del Morse.

A Parisian Beauty's Revenge.

An English Ambassadress, resident in the Legitimist faubourg, and avoiding the Napoleonites as "low," gave grand dinners and parties. One of these an English lady took, unbaptized, a pretty French woman, a friend of the Empress. The pretty woman made herself conspicuous by her prettiness and flirtations, but the Marchioness found out who she was, and was disgusted. She said to her:

"I am so conscious of the honor you have done me that I dare not assert a position of the unexpected compliment."

The pretty woman grew pale, but smiled, and ordered a cavalier to get her carriage. The pretty woman was clever, and hissed a revenge. She bribed the Marchioness' femme de chambre to give her the list of people invited for the next soiree. Armed with this, she prepared a circular note, which she dispatched to each of the invited late in the afternoon of the appointed day: "The Marchioness presents her compliments to so and so, and regrets that domestic calamity will prevent her," etc. She then went to a great "Mad Doctor," representing herself as the daughter of the Marchioness, and acting with the consent of her Ladyship's family; she represented that her mother, the Marchioness, was afflicted with insanity, and her madness was in the delusion that she was always having great parties. For instance, if musician, the doctor, would go to her Ladyship's hotel that evening, he would find her dressed in great splendor, with the salon illuminated, filled with flowers, and buffets covered with refreshments.

The doctor went, on the understanding that he was to obtain the proper police authority to take the Marchioness to Maison DeSante in the event of the representation made to him being confirmed by his own observation. He arrived at ten in the evening; he was the first—the only—guest; and, though the Marchioness did not remember his name, she took it for granted that she had invited him, and was profusely civil. His manner puzzled and his speech startled her, and as he grew abrupt as his perception of her lunacy became more clear, she was at last offended and rang for her servants. At the same time he made the proper intimation of his police authority; and the end of the story is, that she was taken off by the men in waiting, and detained as a prisoner in his asylum until the whole truth came out. All Paris was laughing, and the pretty dirl was a heroine forever. Protected by her august friend, she escaped retaliation—a British Marchioness is too grand for wit.

The Boy Who Advised.

The architect who plans high front stoops to pave in league with certain boys who have a "large and assorted stock" of uneasiness born in their natures. Proof of this can be found every day in the week in Detroit, and the latest was gathered in no later than Saturday afternoon. A very nice young man, dressed in the nobbiest style, and sporting a cane which never cost less than a dollar, walked up the high front stoops of a fashionable consummation and pulled the bell. It was plain enough even to the driver of a street car that the young man had an affection for some one in the house, and that he was about to meet his charmer. But, it wasn't so plain to a stub-nosed boy who was sitting on a piece of an Indian warrior on the flagstones with a piece of indigo. He looked up, quit his work, and hooking along to the gate he called out:

"Then air folks don't want any patent toothpaste to-day?"

The young man gave a sudden start of surprise, but he instantly realized the vastness of the gulf separating him and that street boy, and he did not reply.

"Our folks don't want any clothes wringers to-day, sir; you want to hear me?" called the boy.

The young man heard him. Several pedestrians also heard him, and as they passed on they looked back and wondered why no one answered the bell.

"I'm telling you fellow up there," said the boy, "that we don't keep no bourbon whisky here! If you want cheap board you must go around the corner, and three blocks straight on! No you progress to get in at this door!"

As no one came to the door the young man pulled the bell again.

"I'm telling you that you can't pass yourself off on me as a grasshopper different," shouted the boy. "If you want some cold victles go around to the side door!"

Four pedestrians had halted, on the other side of the street, and the young man looked down on the boy and sighingly asked:

"Boy, can you catch an oxnia?"

We don't keep no patent medicine here for a national monument to the inventor of the flesh-pan!" replied the boy.

"What I'm talking to you is because I want to get behind the cook's door!"

The young man wished a wish containing 413 grains that that builder would come high and been dead for forty years, but the door didn't open, and the boy sung right to him calling out:

"Hain't I been telling you that you can't get in there! You may be the private watchman on this block, but you won't go in at this door! Put down your corn-cob and pulling your door-bells and putting on airs! He'll have to argy much longer till call the police!"

"I've got a half a dollar here, boy!" said the young man, as he turned around.

"Let's see how it looks!" softly replied the lad.

But the half dollar was at loose. The young man searched for it in vain, and the disgusted boy turned to the men across the street and called out:

"I'm right again the last time! Come to be taking a brassway impression of a front door lock in the daytime?"

They started to come over, and the young man hurried down the steps and up the street. He gave the boy just one look. It was a look in which railroad collisions and steamboat explosions were equally mixed and then strained with a Bourbon kicker.

"Quit a-fin work at me and try to buy me off!" growled the boy, "but these principles of honesty were painted all over me when I was a baby, and they don't be rubbed out nor sought up for wealth!"

Just then a young lady threw open the door and smiled and bowed and got as far as: "Why, Ewell!" when she discovered he wasn't there. The footman was out and she had waited to "open up," and "Ewell" had gone. She backed in and shut the door, and the mean boy got down to finish his Indian, interfere.—Detroit Free Press.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Few farmers know or appreciate the value of ashes as a manure. Applied to young crops they are worth one shilling per bushel, and if scattered around the fruit trees will certainly kill the worms.—Prairie Farmer.

Grange Lemon Pie.—Take two teacups of steamed Hubbard squash, two teacups sugar, one teacup vinegar, the yolks of two eggs and one tablespoon corn-starch, season with lemon extract, bake with one crust. Beat the whites of eggs to a stiff froth, and two tablespoons of white sugar, spread over the pie and set in the oven to brown.

—Ginger Nuts.—One cup of brown sugar, one of molasses, one of boiling water, in which a heaping teaspoonful of soda has been dissolved, the bulk of an egg in half dropping size of butter, a tablespoonful of good ginger, a nutmeg, yolks of two eggs, and flour to make a stiff batter, which may be dropped with a spoon on to a tin. Caraways are better than nutmeg for those who like them.

Baked Eggs.—Butter a clean, smooth saucepan, break as many eggs as will be needed into a saucer, one by one, if found, good, slip into the dish. No broken yolks should go from dish to vessel so as to risk breaking the yolk after put in. Put a small piece of butter on each egg, season with pepper and salt, set into a well heated oven, and bake till the whites are set. If the oven is rightly heated it will take but a few minutes, and is far more delicate than fried eggs.—Cincinnati Times.

—A plan for improving the aroma of butter, in use in many parts of Switzerland noted for good milk and fine butter, is as follows: The milk, as soon as it is drawn, and while yet warm, is filtered through a spray of wood fir tips, the stem of which is inserted loosely and upright in the hole of the funnel. The milk deposits hairs, skins, clots or gelatinous sliminess on the leaves. It has imparted to it a most agreeable odor, and does not readily spoil the belt. Hatching Chickens.

This is the special business of the spring with poultry-keepers, and requires all the thought and care that can be given to it. The artificial method from chickens of the farm. In the first place, eggs selected for hatching should be fresh. Those laid in early March will prove much better than those laid later. All through the incubating season eggs should be kept in a cool, dry place, and not in a damp cellar. Eggs should be turned every day, each end being placed alternately uppermost; that is one day the large end is up and the next day the small one. By this care the eggs will hatch much better than if left on one side, as the yolk floats to the top whichever way the egg is left, and dries to the side, spoiling it for incubation.

A cool cellar is the best place to keep eggs in. When both eggs and hens are ready, the eggs should be marked with ink, for pencil marks become obliterated during incubation. A good way is with a little brush or stick to make a ring round the eggs near either end, but so far on that a glance into the nest will detect any eggs laid therein, during incubation. It is well not to make this ink line around the center of the eggs, as it might interfere with the hatching. It the ink covers that part of the shell where it opens to let out its tenant.

Eleven or twelve eggs are enough for a hen in cold weather, but in warm weather thirteen may be set. Never set a hen in a deep nest, as she will break the eggs when jumping into the nest. The best way to prepare a nest, is to cut a grass sod the size of the bottom of the nest-box; make it a little hollow, so that the eggs may not roll to the side, baked the sod on this sod with a little straw near to the top of the nest, box or basket. Whenever you set a hen, where she has laid, do so, unless it is in a place where other hens would trouble her. It is best to give a hen the eggs at night, particularly if you remove her to a new nest. When convenient, set several hens at the same time. Should many eggs prove bad when examined after the first eight days, the good ones may be distributed to some of the hens to make up a full number to each hen, and the remaining hens can have fresh eggs given them. The way to tell whether eggs are good is to hold one at a time up to the sun, or lamp light, shading the egg with your hands all round except the side toward the lamp and the opposite side turned to the eye, so that the egg can be seen through. Should it appear quite clear it is not fertile. At that stage of incubation, eggs that are not sterile will appear dark almost all over.

To keep hens clear from parasites while sitting it is good to dust a little pulverized sulphur through their feathers and in the nest; all sitting hens should be so treated. Difference of opinion exists as to letting a hen sit with her hatching her. I prefer looking into the nest daily. In case an egg gets broken, it should be taken out, the nest washed, and the straw, hay or bottom of the nest cleansed. If this is not done the nest becomes foul and unhealthy, and ripe for the hatching of lice and chicks. The wildest hens soon become accustomed to being handled on the nest, when this is done carefully.

In cold weather eggs may generally be left without further trouble, but in hot weather sometimes the chicks have difficulty in breaking the shell and often perish in the attempt. To prevent this a little tepid water sprinkled in the nest, from the sitter's mouth in the morning's day, will help the shell to part. During the process of incubation, the shell of an egg becomes brittle, through a supply of wood fir tips, the stem of which is inserted loosely and upright in the hole of the funnel. The milk deposits hairs, skins, clots or gelatinous sliminess on the leaves. It has imparted to it a most agreeable odor, and does not readily spoil the belt. It was plain enough even to the driver of a street car that the young man had an affection for some one in the house, and that he was about to meet his charmer. Extraordinary Case of Somnambulism.

As Sergt. Haggerty was sitting at the desk in the Fifth-street Police Station shortly before midnight on Monday a pale young man entered the room.

"What do you want?" asked the Sergeant.

"I have come to give myself up," answered the young man, in a low voice.

"Come to give yourself up?" said the Sergeant, half inquiringly. "Well, what's the matter?"

"I've killed my girl," replied the young man, who seemed to grow paler as he spoke.

"Come, now," said the Sergeant, forcing a smile, "this is the 1st of April."

"But I killed her," pleaded the young man. "I poked her head through a window and cut her throat from ear to ear."

The Sergeant at first thought that the young man was drunk, and then that he was an escaped lunatic. He asked:

"Where does your girl live?"

"She lives at No. 516 East Fourteenth street, and her name is Eliza Gleason," was the answer.

The Sergeant called Special Officer Bissard and told him to go to the house mentioned. Just as the officer went away the young man started for the door.

"Hold on," said the Sergeant, sternly. "You are a prisoner."

The young man, not heeding the command, pushed Sergeant Haggerty aside, ran into the doorway, and the Sergeant hurried from behind the desk and grasped him by the shoulder.

"Where am I?" exclaimed the young man, shuddering and looking about him in a dazed way. There was no reply to the question, but he was locked up. The detective returned from the residence of the young lady, saying that she was alive, and that the man had informed her of the charge the young man had made against himself she thought someone was trying to make her the victim of an April fool's joke. Yesterday morning the young man was taken before Judge Flanner, in the Essex Market Police Court, and was immediately discharged. His friends say that he is a somnambulist, and that he was undoubtedly asleep when he entered the Police Station. He had been reading of Mme. Restell's terrible death, and, falling asleep, dreamed that he killed his fiancée's mother. His name is Peter Coby, and he is in the employ of the father of the young lady whose name he mentioned in the station. Dr. Austin Flint, Sr., and Dr. Ramsey thinks that it is a very extraordinary case of somnambulism.—N. Y. World.

AMERICAN DOG LAW.—Some citizens of Michigan may not yet be aware that, at the last session of our State Legislature a new law taxing dogs was enacted, such, however, is the fact, and the law has gone into effect this year. The law provides that there shall be levied and collected annually upon every male dog the sum of one dollar, and upon every female dog the sum of three dollars. This tax is to be assessed by the supervisor or assessor of the township or ward in which the owner resides; and neglect or refusal on the part of such officer to perform the duties required by this act subjects him to a fine of not less than $50 or more than $100. Every person in possession of a dog, or who shall suffer a dog to remain about his house for the space of fifteen days previous to the assessment, shall be deemed the owner of such dog.

—News for our sportsmen. The indiscriminate slaughter of pigeons, young and old, in the Petoskey region, has come to a halt. Three parties have been arrested and fined $50 and costs each for netting the birds within less than two miles of their resting, a forbidden by law. Not less than 400 Indians were also warned away from the nesting grounds, and made lively time when assured of the law impending in case of a failure to travel. There have been at least 1,500 persons engaged in the business there this spring, and the birds have been killed regardless of age or condition and in utter disregard of law, till the representatives of the Saginaw sportsmen's club arrived on the ground and set the officers at work. The pigeons occupy the country for 10 miles way and from four to [illegible]

The war cloud is deepening. A Vienna correspondent telegraphs that all negotiations have failed, and that it is a question only of days for an outbreak of war between England and Russia. Unless negotiations shall have reached a more satisfactory stage than can now be hoped for, there is good authority for believing that the English government has said its last word, and that its policy now is to continue to straighten its forces and prepare for war.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, dated the 15th day of December, A. D. 1871, made and executed by Mary Ann Lang, of Detroit, A. Balch, of Charlevoix County, Mich., and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 30th day of December, A. D. 1874, in liber one of Mortgages, on page 264, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said Norman A. Balch to Lydia Smith and Rachel S. smith, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the 2d day of February, 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan aforesaid, in said liber of Mortgages, on page 425, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred and sixteen dollars and thirty-three cents and an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for in said Mortgage, and no proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the monies secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 25th day of May, A. D. 1878, at two o'clock in the afternoon, I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with seven per cent. interest, and the legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for therein; the premises being described in said mortgage as the south half of the north west quarter of section fourteen (14) in Township Thirty-two (32) North, of Range Five (5) West, containing Eighty (80) acres, per United States survey.

NOTICE.

U. S INTERNAL-REVENUE SPECIAL TAX

Under the Revised Statutes of the United States, Sections 3232, 3237, 3238, and 3239, every person engaged in any business, Association or commercial, which renders him liable to a special tax, is required to procure and place and keep conspicuously in his establishment or place of business a stamp denoting the payment of said special tax for the special tax year beginning May 1, 1878. Section 3241, Revised Statutes, designates who are liable to special tax. A return as prescribed on Form 11, is also required by law of every person liable to special tax as above. Severe penalties are prescribed for non-compliance with the foregoing requirements, or for continuing in business after April 30, 1878, without payment of tax.

Application should be made to S. S. BAILEY, Collector of Internal Revenue, at Grand Rapids, Mich.

OLD MISSION NURSERY

Apple Trees $3 per 100.

For 30 days I will sell a block of apple trees at the Nursery adjoining the large ice house, at the low price of $3 per 100. Bring your spade and help dig and select to suit yourself.

I have an immense stock of extra fine 3 and 4 years old apple trees of all the leading hardy varieties which I will sell at $15 per 100 handled and delivered at the boat. I send out none but sound large thrifty trees, six to seven feet high.

This nursery had no connection with the nursery stock delivered around the country a few years ago by one Adams.

I have more good trees than all other nurseries together in the Traverse region and will sell below at any time as good trees can be grown for.

Address C. P. AVERY,

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on the Probate County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Hattie E. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon, It is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted:

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

MARINE.—M. J. Stockman writes from Buffalo that owing to the excessive rains the work on the upper works of the steamer Gazelle have been delayed, but that we may expect her here during the present week

—The scow Hercules arrived at this port on Sunday. The traditional horse-shoe seems to have been insufficient to keep bad luck from the decks of this vessel, and since leaving here her experience has been of the woful sort. In entering the harbor at Montague she struck one of the piers and carried away her jib-boom; and while crossing the lake Gurley Beak, one of the men before the mast, fell overboard from the main boom, and was barely saved. She is loading and repairing at the head of Pine Lake.

—The schooner Ben Higby, recently purchased by L. D. Bartholomew, of this place arrived one day last week, loaded with wood, and departed Saturday for Milwaukee. She is commanded by Capt. Lewis Gebo of this place.

—The bark Elgin arrived Sunday and is loading in the harbor with square timber for Kelley & McAllister, of Windsor, Ont., and when loaded will be consigned to Quebec for the English market. The timber was got out on the Boyne river, was brought down in a raft last week, and consists of 17,000 feet.

—Now in port: Scows Ida Bloom, Hercules, D. R. Owen Alaska, Dunham, and schooner Henrietta Esch.

—The schooner Geo. W. Wercott has arrived as we go to press.

—The schooner Radiest left Saturday with wood, and the schooners Mariner and Cheesman, and scow Prince left yesterday with cargoes

—The scow Dunham broke two of the guard piles of the new bridge, coming into the harbor yesterday in tow of the Tug Tillson. Too much gas on the tug was the cause.

—During the month of April, 1878, there we 29 clearances from the port of Charlevoix—the tonnage being 2051 tons.

THE Fountain City House is being thoroughly overhauled, re painted and grained, and will soon be in fine shape to accommodate summer tourists.

THIRTY car loads of square timber were shipped from Melrose, in this county, on the 27th, and more to follow.

THE HARBOR.

Arrival of Inspector Burke to Examine into its Needs.

Inspector W. W. Burke, who last season had charge of the work on Charlevoix harbor arrived here Wednesday, in pursuance orders from Col. Mansfield, to ascertain and report in what manner the forthcoming appropriation of $12,000 can be best expended. In his letter of instruction to Mr. Burke, Col. Mansfield states that the bill had passed the House, and that he doubted not "the Senate would make quick work of it."

Mr. Burke made a thorough examination of the channel and piers, taking very extensive soundings throughout the entire length of the river, and to a distance of 200 feet outside the piers. The permanent pier work is in good condition, and at no point in the line of the channel does he find a less depth than eight feet.

In view of the temporary lull in the shipping business of Pine Lake, Mr. Burke is of the opinion that no dredging in the channel will be necessary this summer. By taking advantage of this circumstance nearly the whole amount appropriated may be expended in putting in permanent pier-work. Past experience has proven that without an extension of the north pier all money expended in dredging is little better than wasted.

Firmly convinced of this fact, Mr. Burke will recommend to Col. Mansfield that at least 150 feet be added to the [illegible], and that [illegible] be placed [illegible] side of the channel of the pier. [illegible] bear the foot of the dock. Further work, upon the south pier or elsewhere, will depend upon the extent of the residue of funds after the work mentioned has been completed.

We are of the opinion that Mr. Burke's reasoning is sound, and will meet with the hearty approval of our people.

Col. Mansfield's promptness in anticipating the final result of the Senate's action, and taking a step which will constitute an important part of the initiative measures to be taken when once the bill becomes a law, is especially to be commended.

A very satisfactory feature of the work which will be recommended by Mr. Burke is the fact that the bulk of the $12,000 will be expended and distributed here, instead of taken away by dredge contractors.

To the people of Charlevoix and vicinity: All who want to buy good goods cheap come to our place and get prices before buying and see if we cannot suit you. See & Washburn.

We take the following from the Kalamazoo Telegraph:

The parties in Kalamazoo who are interested in the purchase of grounds at Charlevoix for a summer resort are preparing to organize under the State law. A fine steamer for Pine lake has been bought at $5,000 by a gentleman at Charlevoix. This is one of the most charming lakes in the State, and connects with Lake Michigan by a water passage navigable to the larger steamers. An appropriation of $12,000 has recently been made by Congress for the improvement of the harbor at Charlevoix.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

For 18 years we have manufactured Saleratus with great success. For the past two years we have been manufacturing by a new process it never becomes hard and is always uniform in strength. MEETING.—DAVID B. CORLEY and Jos. J. M. ACKERT left here on Friday for Buffalo to bring up the new steamer Gerrish.

—The propeller Empire State passed this port on her way down last trip.

—The propeller Edgar Slate wood'd here Sunday on her way up.

—L. D. Bartholomew, of this place, has purchased the schooner Len Higby, of Milwaukee, and it will run under its bark and wood trade between this place and the lake ports.

—The scow Hercules found herself in a bad condition, and was obliged to go into dry dock at Milwaukee for caulking and other repairs. She is expected here daily.

A printer made a young poetess say "Oh for a heart full of sweet yearlings." The poetess wrote to the editor that she meant yearnings, and that the editor was a calf. Many horse-traders have had heart yearlings over poor biscuits which could have been avoided by using Smith's aderatus made by the new process. Use only 3/4 the quantity you have been using of other brands.

ARCHIVAL DOG LAW.—Some citizens of Michigan may not yet be aware that at the last session of our State Legislature a new law taxing dogs was enacted; such, however, is the fact, and the law has gone into effect this year. The law provides that there shall be levied and collected annually upon every male dog the sum of one dollar, and upon every female dog the sum of three dollars. This tax is to be assessed by the supervisor or assessor of the township or ward in which the owner resides; and neglect or refusal on the part of such officer to perform the duties required by this act subjects him to a fine of not less than $50 or more than $100. Every person in possession of a dog, or who shall suffer a dog to remain about his house for the space of fifteen days previous to the assessment, shall be deemed the owner of such dog.

News for our sportsmen. The indiscriminate slaughter of pigeons, young and old, in the Petoskey region, has come to a halt. Five parties have been arrested and fined $50 and costs each for netting the birds within less than two miles of their netting, as forbidden by law. Not less than 400 Indians were also warned away from the nesting grounds, and made lively tires when ordered off the law impending in case of a failure to travel. There have been at least 1,500 persons engaged in the business there this spring, and the birds have been killed regardless of age or condition and in other seasons [illegible] till the representatives of the sportsmen's club arrived on the ground and set the officers at work. The pigeons occupy the country for 40 miles [illegible] and from four to six miles

THE WAR-CLOUD is deepening. A Vienna correspondent telegraphs that all negotiations have failed, and that it is a question only of days for an outbreak of war between England and Russia. Unless negotiations shall have reached a more satisfactory stage than can now be hoped for, there is good authority for believing that the English government has sold its last word, and that its policy now is to continue to strengthen its forces and prepare for war.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage dated the 17th day of December, A. D. 1877, made and executed by Mary Ann Case, of Newton A. Hatch, of Charlevoix County, Mich., and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 20th day of December, A. D. 1874, in Liber one of Mortgages, on page 264, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said Newton A. Hatch to Lydia Smith and Lucretia Smith, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the 2d day of February, 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan aforesaid, in Liber one of Mortgages, on page 425, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred and Sixteen Dollars and thirty-three cents, and no attorney fee of thirty dollars provided for in said Mortgage, and no proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided, Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 14th day of May, A. D. 1878, at two o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the Court House in the village of Charlevoix, that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with seven per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars, provided for therein; the premises being described in said mortgage as the south half of the north west quarter of Section fourteen (14) in Township Thirty-two (32) North, of Range Five (5) West, containing eighty (80) acres, per United States survey.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January, A. D. 1878. Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Nathaniel F. Youmans, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that letters may be granted thereon to the executor named. Thereupon, it is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

—As an item of news we record the fact that Joseph R. Dixon and bride arrived in town on Saturday by propeller Empire State.

THE BRIDGE.—The contractors have the piles all driven for the foundation and guards of the new bridge, and the Toledo contractors are expected here daily with the iron for the superstructure.

J. A. JOHNSON, for several years past a resident of Charlevoix, has purchased the farm known as the Johnson place, near Myron Geer's, in Marion, and has taken possession.

MARINE.—M. J. Stockman writes from Buffalo that owing to the excessive rains the work on the upper works of the steamer Gazelle have been delayed, but that we may expect her here during the present week.

—The scow Hercules arrived at this port on Sunday. The traditional horse-shoe seems to have been insufficient to keep bad luck from the decks of this vessel, and since leaving here her experience has been of the woful sort. In entering the harbor at Montague she struck one of the piers and carried away her jib-boom; and while crossing the lake Gurley Book, one of the men before the mast, fell overboard from the main boom, and was barely saved. She is loading and repairing at the head of Pine Lake.

—The schooner Len Higby, recently purchased by L. D. Bartholomew, of this place arrived one day last week, loaded with wood, and departed Saturday for Milwaukee. She is commanded by Capt. Lewis Gebo of this place.

—The bark Elgin arrived Sunday and is loading in the harbor with square timber for Kelley & McAllister, of Windsor, Ont., and which will be consigned to Quebec for the English market. The timber was got out on the Boyne river, was brought down in a raft last week, and consists of 17,000 feet.

—Now in port: Scows Ida Bloom, Hercules, D. R. Owen, Alaska, Dunham, and schooner Henrietta Eech.

—The schooner Geo. W. Wercott has arrived as we go to press.

—The schooner Radical left Saturday with wood, and the schooners Mariner and Flecksing, and sloop Prince left yesterday with cargoes.

—The scow Dunham broke two of the guard piles of the new bridge, coming into the harbor yesterday in tow of the Tug Tillson. Too much gas on the tug was the cause.

—During the month of April, 1878, there we 29 clearances from the port of Charlevoix—the tonnage being 3934 tons.

THE Fountain City House is being thoroughly overhauled, re painted and grained, and will soon be in fine shape to accommodate summer tourists.

THIRTY car-loads of square timber were shipped from Melrose, in this county, on the 27th, and more to follow

JAMES E. WOOD, of this place, can manufacture as good a set of harness as any manufacturer in Northern Michigan and do it just as cheap. Patronize home industry.

Seersucker dress goods, silk finish, black mohair and figured birets, all new goods just received. FOX, ROSE & BUTTARS.

THE Big Rapids Pioneer Magnet endorses the sentiments expressed in our editorial last week advocating the re-nomination of Hon. J. A. Hubbell.

THERE is an increased demand for propeller wood, and A. Fox & Co., of this place, have sold the W. T. Co. 3,000 cords of shipping wood, for the propellers of that line which stop here

THE Charlevoix Sentinel begins this week, its tenth volume. The Sentinel has done a good work for the Pine Lake country and is well deserving the hearty support of the people of Charlevoix and adjoining counties. We hope it may receive it.—Herald.

Call and look at our handsome stock of ginghams. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

John Wood, of Charlevoix, has a view of Windsor Castle in process of painting It is now in the rough, but judging from its present appearance it gives promise of a very fine painting when completed.—Progress.

THE State road school house in Banks, just being erected will have a belfrey and bell, the latter to be furnished by a gentleman named Marshall, Payneville, Ohio.

THE HARBOR.

Arrival of Inspector Burke to Examine Into Its Needs.

Inspector W. W. Burke, who last season had charge of the work on Charlevoix harbor arrived here Wednesday, in pursuance orders from Col. Mansfield, to ascertain and report in what manner the forthcoming appropriation of $12,400 can be best expended. In his letter of instruction to Mr. Burke, Col. Mansfield states that the bill had passed the House, and that he doubted not "the Senate would make quick work of it."

Mr. Burke made a thorough examination of the channel and piers, taking very extensive soundings throughout the entire length of the river, and to a distance of 200 feet outside the piers. The permanent pier work is in good condition, and at no point in the line of the channel does he find a less depth than eight feet.

In view of the temporary lull in the shipping business of Pine Lake, Mr. Burke is of the opinion that no dredging in the channel will be necessary this summer. By taking advantage of this circumstance nearly the whole amount appropriated may be expended in putting in permanent pier-work. Past experience has proven that without an extension of the north pier all money expended in dredging is little better than wasted.

Firmly convinced of this fact, Mr. Burke will recommend to Col. Mansfield that at least 150 feet be added to the [illegible] and that a [illegible] trary breadth be given [illegible] side of the channel at the pierhead, near the foot of the dock. Further work, upon the south pier or elsewhere, will depend upon the extent of the residue of funds after the work mentioned has been completed.

We are of the opinion that Mr. Burke's reasoning is sound, and will meet with the hearty approval of our people.

Col. Mansfield's promptness in anticipating the final result of the Senate's action, and talking a step which will constitute an important part of the initiative measures to be taken when once the bill becomes a law, is especially to be commended.

A very satisfactory feature of the work which will be recommended by Mr. Burke is the fact that the bank of the channel at the pierhead, near the foot of the dock. Further work, upon the south pier or elsewhere, will depend upon the extent of the residue of funds after the work mentioned has been completed.

Andrew J. Mudge and wife, to Robert Gillard, 40 acres of land in Marion.—$950.

State of Michigan to W. P. Burhans, 280 acres of land in Wilson and Bear Lake.—$250

U. S. to Joseph Moore, 80 acres in Wilson.

The parties in Kalamazoo who are interested in the purchase of grounds at Charlevoix for a summer resort are preparing to organize under the State law. A fine steamer for Pine lake has been bought at $5,000 by a gentleman at Charlevoix. This is one of the most charming lakes in the State, and connects with Lake Michigan by a water passage navigable to the larger steamers. An appropriation of $12,000 has recently been made by Congress for the improvement of the harbor at Charlevoix.—Kalamazoo Telegraph.

For 18 years we have manufactured Saleratus with great success. For the past two years we have been manufacturing by a new process it never becomes hard and is always uniform in strength. It is made from the best English stock is perfectly pure and is stronger than any other saleratus in the market. By following the directions and using ¼ less than of other brands, your biscuits will always be nice, sweet and spongy. Try it

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 16th, Mr. Howe called up a resolution introduced by him a few weeks before, calling upon the President for certain information in regard to Judge Webster, of Louisiana, and made some remarks upon the former speech, after which the resolution was adopted, as was also a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information relative to the balances due from the Collectors of Internal Revenue not now in office, as to what amount had been settled by acquittance, etc. Bills were passed—regulating the appointment of cadet midshipmen and engineers to the Naval Academy, 35 Annapolis; for the relief of certain settlers on public lands; to incorporate the National Pacific Railroad and Telegraph Company. A bill was introduced to authorize the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to bring and prosecute suits against the United States to recover money due on account of the proceeds of sales of public lands. A bill to establish uniformity the mode of passports free to colored citizens passed in the House. Bills were introduced—to construct a railroad for the passage of naval vessels from the Mississippi River to Lake Michigan; for the extinction of colored travelers in Mississippi; to prevent the reduction of the salaries of United States voters. The Deficiency Appropriation bill was considered and amended in Committee of the Whole. An evening session was held, at which about fifty Pension bills were passed.

VICE-PRESIDENT WHEELER being absent, Mr. Ferry acted as President pro tempore of the Senate, on the 17th. A substitute for the House bill to repeal the Specie-Resumption act was finally reported from the Finance Committee, providing that on and after the passage of the substitute United States notes shall be received in payment of all dues to the United States and all other dues, and after the passage of the act no United States notes shall be issued or paid out for the redemption or sale of United States bonds except in exchange for other United States notes of different denominations, but two, three and five dollar notes may be issued to the amount of $50,000,000 in excess of the notes now authorized by law. The bill was discussed by Messrs. Morrill (Vt.), Sherman and Ferry, and was finally postponed—19 to 19. The House bill to amend the act of July 1, 1862, creating the Pacific Railroad, was passed. Bills were introduced—to provide colleges for the benefit of agricultural and mechanical arts in the State of Colorado. In the House, a bill was passed regulating the salaries among the clerks of twenty-seven silver mines. Several bills were reported from committees, but none of them were of public interest. Pending that any person may deposit money with any United States depositary, in sums not less than twenty-five cents, in gold or silver coin, or in any of the United States notes of less denomination than five dollars, the Postmaster shall issue to the depositor a certificate on the United States Treasurer for the deposit, which shall be exempt from taxation, authorizing the deposit of silver bullion and the issue of certificates therefor. A meeting to relieve the several members of the final adjournment on the 10th of June, to the Committee on Ways and Means, was defeated—yeas, 107; nays, 129. Pending further consideration of the resolution, the House adjourned.

Bills were passed in the Senate, on the 18th—in relation to the Hot Springs Reservation, in Arkansas; authorizing the entrance of Colorado, Nevada and the Territories to sell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes. Bills to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States. Adjourned to the 20th. The report of the Conference Committee on the bill making appropriations for the employment of temporary clerks in the Treasury Department, and for other purposes, was considered in the House, the committee being unable to agree, and a new conference with the Senate was asked for. The motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote refusing to refer the concurrent adjournment resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means was defeated—116 to 138. Eulogies were delivered on the late Representative Leonard, of Louisiana.

SENATE not in session on the 19th.

—Bills were passed in the House—for the free entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for the encouragement of art and science. Senate bill increasing the pension of Gen. Anna E. Ellet to $50 per month, making the amount $900 instead of fifty dollars per month. The motion to reconsider the vote passing S. 7, the Senate salary adjustment bill, resulting in the vote—yeas, 107; nays, 129. It was agreed to—116 to 91—when the motion to reconsider was withdrawn, and a motion was adopted by 120 to 13—yeas, 74; nays, 57—to lay the motion to the table until May 15.

IN the Senate, on the 22d, a bill was introduced and referred to repeal that section of the Revised Statutes which provides for a tax on the notes of State Banking Associations. Resolutions were introduced—declaring that any railroad charge in the present Tariff laws would, in the judgment of the Senate, be inopportune, etc., and that it should be the fixed policy of the Government in any revision of the tariff to recognize as a fixed obligation protection to American labor. In the House, the resolution of the Maryland Legislature requesting the Presidential question were referred to the judiciary committee. Bills were introduced and referred—repealing the law imposing a tax on deposits of State Banking Associations; prohibiting members of Congress and officers and employees of the Government from receiving any money or its services thereafter in any proceeding, contract or claim in which the United States may be directly or indirectly interested; regulating foreign insurance companies doing business in the United States. The bill providing for the issue of fractional currency and for the issue of Treasury notes in small denominations of one, two, three and five dollars, was discussed by Mr. Hill, who made his speech in favor of the bill, and was then followed by Messrs. Sherman and Ferry. The bill was made the special order that some time in the future the Speaker directed that the House should proceed to the consideration. After a few further remarks and a short conversation, the motion was withdrawn, and the bill was passed—appropriating $1,30,-000. Mr. Coy (New York) then rose to a privileged question for the purpose of introducing a bill to amend the Constitution, which, signed by twenty-eight members of the House, would much encourage and promote the object. The bill was finally presented—10 to 191. The protest was signed by Messrs. Rood, Wheeler, Hazelhurst, Burleigh, Luttrell, Cravens, Willis (Ky.), Foster, Beebe, Jones, R. M. Smith, Corbin, Halsell (Tenn.), Monahan, Ellis, Cox (N. Y.), Hazelton (N. Y.), Ingersoll, Reed, Gardner, Browne, Hazleton (ind.), Candler, Stenger, Rice (Ohio), Dickey, Hamilton.

DOMESTIC.

SOME of the National Banks in Chicago, Cincinnati and other parts of the West, are redeeming their bills in specie.

A YOUNG lady named Effie DaCostra, aged twenty one years, living in Philadelphia, was so terribly burned a few days since ago through her clothes taking fire by her treading on a match that she died on the evening of the same day. Hattie Green, aged twenty-six, attempted to rescue Miss DaCosta, and was also fatally burned.

ON the morning of the 18th, at Toledo, Ohio, Henry Rudolph, aged ten years, shot and killed Freddy Fowler, one ten years old. They had had a schoolboy quarrel the day before, and on the morning in question Rudolph bought an old revolver and shot Fowler as he entered the school grounds. He died instantly. The youthful murderer was locked up.

JOSEPH HARTMANN, a German resident of New York City, died recently of trichinosis. It seems that his wife cooked for him a piece of a shoulder, last Christmas, of which she and Hartmann partook. On the 5th of January Hartmann was taken ill, and so remained until the 14th of April, when he died, as above stated. Pieces cut from the body of the deceased showed undoubted evidence of trichinæ-spiralis. His wife was ill, but, on the 18th, there were prospects that she might recover.

SAM STEERSMUTH, a colored man, forty-five years of age was hanged at Bordentown, N. J., on the 19th, for the murder, last November, of Jacob S. Parker, at Amsterdam, N. Y. A few days before the execution Steersmuth confessed to having killed eleven persons, the first murder being committed when he was fourteen years old.

AT Alton, S. C., on the 19th, Robert McEvoy was executed for the murder in April, 1876, of Capt. J. J. Gregg. Before his death he confessed to the commission of several crimes.

ACCORDING to a Constantinople dispatch of the 17th, the Sultan had given orders to his troops stationed on the Roumelian frontier to refrain from all hostilities. They are attracted there by the vast swamp of doubtedalum or called bush, roamed mostly about the Danube and Pruth. Of this oleander, almost identical with the sweet bay. The unseemly cold winter has swelled and destroyed the bulk of the country's crop. The pigeons are feeding upon them. This circumpregnates their flesh with a subtle poison and numerous fatal cases are daily occurring resulting from eating them. E. F. Adamson, of East Saginaw, in a dispatch to the Chicago Tribune of the 16th say: "You will doubtless save hundreds of lives by warning the public against eating any pigeons until after the middle of June. I have no doubt that the severe grasses and deaths so numerous are directly traceable to eating pigeons."

THE Treasury Department in Washington received information, on the 22d, that the Canadian Government had decided to extend the Treaty of 1854 (per cent. of salmon upon all importations of United States after con shipped into that country.

A FALL RIVER (Mass.) dispatch of the 22d says Geo. T. Hathaway, Treasurer of the Border City & Sangamon Mills, had been proved a defaulter to an amount estimated at from $60,000 to $70,000. His method was similar to that of Chase, Treasurer of the Union Mills.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE United States Senate in Executive session, on the 16th, confirmed several nominations made by the President and rejected that of Justice E. Culburn, Washington correspondent of the New York Times, as consul-general to Mexico.

THE funeral of the late Wm. M. Tweed was solemnized in New York City on the 17th. It was a quiet family affair.

RIGHT REV. SAMUEL A. MCCOSKRY, who lately resigned the Episcopal Bishopric of Michigan on the plea that he was getting old and becoming rapidly infirm, has been shown to have resigned on compulsion and to have left the country to avoid the investigations he had disgraced. The statement was made, on the 17th, that he had been charged with improper conduct, and that, when confronted with the charge and shown impeachment letters he had written to a Detroit woman, he acknowledged his guilt, tendered his resignation and left for Europe.

THE Oregon State Republican Convention met at Salem, on the 18th, and adopted a platform declaring for sound money and for the maintenance of the public faith. A resolution was adopted indorsing the National Administration, and calling for reform in State affairs. H. K. Hines was nominated for Congress and C. C. Beckman for Governor.

A CABLE has been issued for a meeting of the Ohio State Republican Convention in Cincinnati, on the 12th of June.

BISHOP MCCOSKRY, under date of New York, April 20, says: "I give my unqualified denial to the articles which have appeared in different papers against me."

A CALL has been issued by the Republican State Central Committee directing a meeting of the Michigan State Republican Convention, at Detroit, on the 13th of June.

THE International Sunday-School Convention, which for three days previous had been in session at Atlanta, Ga., adjourned sine die on the evening of the 19th. Before adjournment, the following were named as the International Lesson Committee for the next seven years: Rev. John H. Vincent, D. D., New Jersey, Methodist; Rev. John Hall, New York, Presbyterian; B. F. Jacobs, Illinois, Baptist; Rev. Warren Randolph, Indiana, Baptist; Prof. P. G. Gilbert, LL.D., Illinois, Methodist; Rev. Richard Newton, D. D. MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

AT East Saginaw, on the 12th, the propeller Benton was going up the river, slowly, when three boys in a small skiff pulled up under the stern, and one of them seized hold of the propeller and held on, for the purpose of being towed up. Soon after, the engineer, who happened to step from the engine-room to the after gangway, noticed the boat and ordered the boys to let go, telling them they might get hurt, as they were very close to the wheel. He repeated the warning once or twice and then passed into the engine-room, supposing the warning would be heeded. The wind was blowing a gale, and the Benton, steering wildly as she approached the railroad bridge, was caught by a gust and surged over toward the pier. The Mate gave the signal to check down and reverse the engine, and as she settled back the small boat was drawn, by the suction, under the pendicular nine-foot iron screw, and not only capsized, but crushed to atoms, throwing the occupants into the water. Two of them were not seen after the accident, but the third came to the surface and was picked up, but sustained serious if not fatal injuries, having been struck by the blade of the screw-wheel.

THE pigeons are nesting in immense numbers in the timber of the low-lands, feeding on berries at this season of the year. The woods are full of beech-nuts, their favorite and natural food, but the unseemly cold effectively of opinion in this pigeon business anyway.

THE pigeon business is full now. The great industry at Petoskey. Pigeons are there in uncounted millions, and all the available men and teams are now engaged in catching and shipping them. From fifty to fifty barrels per day are shipped, each barrel containing twenty-five dozen. Trappers are paid thirty cents per dozen, and one man with net will take from fifty to sixty dozen per day. One haul of a net, on one day, produced 111 dozen. There are not far from 200 trappers there.

THE other day a son of Ill. Van Tuhlbergen, living south of Holland, while hooking for eggs in the hay loft, fell to the barn floor, striking on his head and crushing in his skull.

Wisdom at the Lime-Kiln Club.

At a recent meeting of the Lime-Kiln Club, Brother Gardner rose up, swept the hall with the glance of an eagle, and, according to a verbatim report in the Detroit Free Press, said:

"Gemlen, yo' I was walkin' round dis mawnin, I pyarched a spot where a hoss had fullen on de street. Dar was a right smart o' men 'roun' dar, and ebbery man o' dem was passin' an' jaunnin' an' clavin' to be nearest to de dyin' animil. One man yelled out one thing, an' one moddier yelled sumthin' else, and de poor hoss didn't know whedder it was best to live or die. Did I rush inter dat crowd? Did I jump up an' down an' raise my clabvem rolce above de odders? Did I push all dem fellers away and shriek out dat I'd rather die dan live?

"In course you did!" replied Chowder Davis as the President halted for breath. Brother Gardner bestowed upon him a look of XXXX contempt, and slowly continued:

"No, gemlen, I didn't! I stood back on de hoss's head, an' I says, sayin' nuffin' to nobody, an' knowin' dat I'd be called on if wanted. Dat's my principal, and dat's de principal dat I wants to inculcate in de minds of de colored people. Sum folks hab got de impression dat de man wot does de most talkin' an' yellin' an' attracks de mos' attenshun am de chap wot makes de biggest pile o' cash, but dem' you bettah b'lieve de county council wagon makes a few lines dis week dat de ossify kerridge does. It am capital in de bank: it am first mortgage on improved real estate; it am purty nigh de sort o' a religion. Stan back! Doan' try to git dar' befo' all de rest. Doan' be shovin' off dem mouths for de simple sake of takin up yer spar time. As de poet says:

"'De big sunflower may rise above
De simple lily in de dell,
An' yet on eyes so true, my love,
But when de sunset bowls sound,
An' de eave fun at de hoss,

The Latest Trick of Trade.

The Miller gives an account of a new trick where one would think it impossible to make a point. For instance, good hunyad wheat is good the world over. But it is not so good when it has gone through the hands of a manipulator who sifts it. The practice now obtains to a considerable extent on the Continent. It is stated that wheat, which in its natural condition would weigh 123 Dutch pounds, by the process of sifting will gain about 10 pounds, or from 10 to 12 per cent., in weight more than there really is of wheat. The gain on part of the dishonest seller is from twenty shillings to twenty-five shillings per ton. The apparent increase in the specific gravity is obtained by an outlay for grain of 30 florins per ponce. Wheat thus treated can never be made into good flour. The particles are not combined into actual stone, but as applied to all grain sold by weight. Of course the adulteration can so easily detected. But what added in this way is only a handsomer grain in appearance than when no such application has been made. It has been possible to adulterate flour and sugar. But who ever heard before of a process for adulterating wheat before milling? In this country, where wheat is so cheap, it is not likely that the chicanery will obtain very extensively. But in times when the price is extremely high, if there could be a gain of say $5 per ton as in Europe, there might be a great deal of oiled wheat. As a trick of trade this is the latest novelty.—San Francisco Bulletin.

A MAY-FLOWER.

The laughing spirit of the May
Inhabits all the woodland ways;
A subtle essence in the air,
A finer undersong everywhere,
A sense of change in all the sky,
That even now are drawing past,
While earth puts on her robe of praise,
When perfect love doth banish fear,
And heavy hearts are glad at last.

The dead leaves lie beneath my feet,
But here and there come pushing through
The lovely buds of future bloom,
Young shoots that wear no olive gloom
And some are tipped with rose and pearl,
And here is the old rendezvous,
All blushing, like a married girl!
I find, alas! a BAD flower-stock.

I spare it with a reverend hand,
For in the shelter of those leaves
It seems a consecrated thing,
The best that ever lived in Spring.
Shine cool to me through all the years!
That summer, buried twenty years
Which every sense is satisfied
A place of which I am proud!
A charm too deep to understand!

GOING INTO PARTNERSHIP.

Mrs. Nottingham, being unable to get the means from her husband to supply her necessities, at last informed him that she would go into the profession of teaching, so as to be as independent as she was before she was married.

"You're not in earnest, my dear?" said Mr. Nottingham.

"Of course I'm in earnest. Why not? Do you suppose I intend to go this way, begging and praying for every farthing I spend? I've been independent once, and I mean to be so again."

"No; but look here!" Mr. Nottingham had risen, and was pacing up and down rather uneasily. "My wife can't go to teaching. What is it that you want?"

"What I can earn!" proudly retorted Mrs. Nottingham.

"But put it into words."

"Well, then, look here," said Mrs. Nottingham; "I have always done my own work, and I can do it well. I can cook a cock. I demand three pounds a month; as a seamstress, one pound; as your wife for housework, one pound a month. And then I shall not consider myself properly compensated."

"Five pounds a month! Active as—It's nearly £20 a month!"

"I consider my services as worth that, at least," said Mrs. Nottingham, rising up and listened to the pleading on either side with the utmost gravity.

"I've want to know my opinion," said Uncle Wetherbee, when they both had finished.

"Certainly," said Mr. Nottingham.

"Of course," said his wife.

"Then look here," said Uncle Wetherbee, "I'll consult Uncle Wetherbee," he said.

"Oh, that's altogether a different matter," said Mr. Nottingham. "I've been thinking I ought to reconsider that affair."

Uncle Wetherbee stared intently at his wooden leg, and said nothing.

"But," added Mr. Nottingham, "about the Falkirk place? It's a little gem of a house, and I've always wanted a house of my own. This rent-paying business don't altogether suit me. And I could give a mortgage for the £200 if you would allow me to use your name as security."

"Oh, certainly, certainly!" said Uncle Wetherbee. "Use it as much as you like."

And Mr. Nottingham went off repleting.

But Wiggs & Saugster, the agents in charge of the Falkirk place, were exhaustively informed.

"Four hundred pounds and a mortgage for the balance is very well," said Mr. Saugster, "but they 'ave had nibbles after this morning—of cash down! And they had considered it their duty to Mr. Falkirk to close with it, but she'll wait perhaps they might suit Mr. Nottingham with some other piece of property."

Mr. Nottingham went home sadly dispirited.

"What's the use of trying to save money?" said he. "I'm going to give up after this!"

"I don't agree with you there, dear," said Mrs. Nottingham. "I've been saving money for the last three years, and I've found it pays."

"You have?" said her husband.

"Of course I have. Do you suppose I spent all the money? Not a bit of it. I put the best part of it out at interest, always following Uncle Wetherbee's advice in my investments, and I've bought a house with it!"

"What house?"

Mr. Nottingham's eyes opened wider and wider.

"The Falkirk house," said Mrs. Nottingham, her lips and cheeks dimpled all over with satisfaction. "I've been the bargain to-day. My dear" stealing one arm around her husband's neck "how do you think I like living in my own house?"

"Better than I could have done myself," said Mr. Nottingham, with a curious moisture coming into his eyes. "My plucky little wife, I am proud of you!"

"It was your money, Nicholas," said the wife, in a faltering voice.

"But it was your prudence and economy that stored it up, Phœbe."

"Do you regret the terms and articles of our partnership?"

So the young couple moved into the Falkirk house when the first of May came around, and a merry time was in the house, with a south window and an open fireplace for a wooden fire, was presented for Uncle Wetherbee.

Turkish Bath Among the Nez Perces.

On last Sunday afternoon a Times reporter visited the Nez Perces camp above Fort Leavenworth, and, through the courtesy of Lieut. Wieting, was permitted for a short time to observe the condition of the red captives. Everything about the camp bore a cheerful aspect and apparent comfort reigned. This is in measure due, perhaps, to the habits of the tribe, which require them to take a bath every morning. The modus operandi of their bath is in some respects peculiar, one portion of the process being a sweat bath. Which fact was first learned by the artisans who were competent for the work built a "sweat-house," consisting of a circular hole in the ground within a few feet of the river and covered ingeniously with earth, making the roof appear like a mound with top like the bottom of an iron kettle. An aperture was left on the east side; in front of this, a fire was built and several large stones which had been collected were heated red hot. In the bottom of the hole was placed a sufficiency of water to create steam; the rocks then were thrown in, and the members of the tribe one after another went into the oven, for such it is, and remained until the body was profusely covered with perspiration. After this a leap through the aperture to the open air, and a plunge into the cold waters of the Missouri finished the bath. This custom is an old one with the Nez Perces, and the bath is taken regularly every morning no matter what the condition of the weather is, or what the ailments of the body may be, so long as the man or woman is able to walk. This proceeding, which is not unlike a Turkish bath, is said by the braves who can speak a little English to "make Indian smell good."—Leavenworth Times.

NEW YORK real-estate dealers, as a rule, declare that the market for city property has seldom been a duller one now. Resident rents have fallen on an average 20 per cent. since 1873, and rents of stores and offices from 30 to 40 per cent.

—Willkie Collins is said to be a short man. He has got lots of company.

Breach of Promise.

According to the London News, the latest case in England of breach of promise of marriage, that of Heap against Smith, does not add much glory to a sort of action which, if a bill now pending in the House of Commons becomes a law, is doomed soon to disappear.

In this affair the ordinary relations of the parties were reversed; it was the man who sued the woman for the breach of contract. There could be no sort of doubt as to the fact of the contract. An agreement was signed by the parties whereby the defendant agreed to become the lawful wife of the plaintiff on or about the 1st of August, 1875. In default the defendant was to pay a third share of the property which might be left to her under the will of her parents. She was to pay more than this if she did not espouse her business-like wooer. She was to pay him £100 per annum at the end of 1875, £200 at the end of 1876, £400 in 1877, and so on, in a sort of martingale, always doubling till the lady died, or married, or perhaps became bankrupt. In the tenth year this sum would be over $50,000 a year. It is not very easy to see how the bypassioned lover, whose christian name for aught we know may have been Uriah, induced Miss Morris to enter into this singular bond. The parties had known each other for a long time. Mr. Heap first made the acquaintance of Miss Morris when she was Second Master at Castor and Grammar School, in 1857 or 1858. The father of Miss Morris was a solicitor practicing in the neighborhood. In 1869 the Master of the school died, and the plaintiff hoped to obtain his place. He failed, and it seems the failure of Miss Morris opposed and prevented the appointment. Ten years after this the singular contract was signed which we have described, and which was perhaps suggested to Mr. Heap as a schoolmaster by his recollection of the arithmetical problem about the nails in a horse's shoe. For the defendant it was alleged that the contract was to be invalid in certain circumstances, but as between man and man a private arrangement was made between the parties, and the aggrieved Mr. Heap accepted the sum of $6,000 as full compensation to his injured feelings. The result seems curious that we learn, from the statement of the defendant's counsel, that his client was willing to pay $5,000 rather than to allow her letters to be produced in court. Certain arrangements had been made as to the future disposal of the documents." Mr. Heap thus wins his case and gets his money, and Miss Morris recovers her letters. Thus we see how noble an institution is that which permits suits for breach of promise of marriage.

Partial Muscular Development.

Any careful observer, passing along our busier thoroughfares, or happening less frequently upon any assemblage anywhere else where men congregate, can hardly have failed to notice that while there are many strong cases and many healthy ones, there are very few who are either thoroughly erect or well-proportioned throughout. And when it is remembered that the large majority of men in this country are sons of farmers, merchants, mechanics, or laborers, it is not difficult to account for this one-sidedness of build and indifferent carriage. For, while the farmer's work is vigorous and in the open air for the greater part of it, and especially the harder part of it, constantly uses his back, and does but little for his front, and pertinently for the front of his chest. Mowing stoops him over and rounds his back; so do spading, and hoeing, and weeding, and lifting of nearly every sort. His back grows thick and strong, perhaps massive; so do some of the muscles of his arms, of his abdomen, and of his legs, until they seem to outstrip the others that his spine, getting once crooked from being so long and so flung held in one position, never gets out of it day or night. While his whole work strengthens, it also stiffens him. He is seldom a good walker, the habit of which is unacquired, though the errand is to a place hardly a mile away, contributing to this stiffness, found, as it usually is, with a stooped position as he rides, so unlike, by-the-way, that which is so common among the English stage-drivers, who elicited praise from Emerson for their dignified grandfatherly air.

Few of the mechanic arts are any more favorable to symmetrical development and uprightness of carriage. The blacksmith, like the farmer, works some muscles tremendously; those of his hands, alone of his shoulders and of one of his arms, for instance; but his legs are often indifferent, and his loins nothing great, while, in common with hosts of mechanics, his work is not done in the open air. Painters and whitewashers have a wider compass in their arms and saw and drive nails well with their right hands; masons, with backs bent, lift heavy stones, which, with two of their hands, they have chiseled into shape for their purpose; shoemakers keep their backs rather more successfully than any other trade; and the jewelers, compositors, designers, and all who do the finer, lighter work, would never, merely by their daily toil, develop into well-built, erect men. They kept at it for a thousand years. Men in mercantile life sit or stand many hours each day, are frequently burdened with important and trying work, have so many irons in the fire as to get no rest, and at the end of the day find themselves thoroughly exhausted and in humor for anything but vigorous muscular exertion. If their work calls them out much, it uses their legs only, leaving the arms idle, and so keeping the development but partial. The spade, the pick and the bar at the laboring-man keep him stamped ever in spite of all he can do, and he lives and dies, as Charles Reade described him in his admirable sketch of the brave blind swimmer of the Scottish firth, James Lambert—a man with a slouch in his gait.—Hitchcock's Hinkles, in Harper's Magazine for May.

Woolen and Silk Costumes.

THE woolen and silk costumes imported for spring do not differ greatly from those of last year, hence it will be an easy matter to alter dresses left over that are not worn, but need simply a change of drapery and trimmings. To modernize polonaises of camel's-hair or other woolen goods all looped draping in the back should be taken out, and the back hemmed, the left to hang plainly in rich folds almost to the end of the skirt beneath. There should be tapes in the side seams to draw all the fullness in the back, and this fullness should be disposed in box-plaits in the middle seam, folded underneath and out of sight; the plain part over the tournure is deeper than formerly. A long-looped bow of double-faced ribbon should be sewed low on the hips on the side seams, or else several horizontal, or perhaps diagonal, rows of watered ribbon may be arranged across each side of the skirt, forming panels. As many polonaises the fronts fall open from the knees down, as if cut away; in altering many polonaises the material needed can be drawn back to give this appearance. To make a polonaise of this kind take black camel's-hair and trim with beaded fringe or with watered ribbon. Another way of putting ribbon or passementerie on these very plain and very stylish over-dresses is to put a row across the fronts below the waist outlining a basque, and when this row reaches the side seam carry it down this seam to the foot, where it is met by the border of ribbon and fringe. Still another way of making suit-back drapery is to take the two middle pieces of the back long, like scarfs, trim them all around with galloon, and lap them to and fro upon each other. Small fluted capes, modeled after the Carrick fich

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 3, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL

Easter Sunday this year was about equally noted for magnificent weather and magnificent costumes, music and flowers From a casual glance I should say that the value of the new bonnets, clothes and jewelry in which feminine Gotham performed its devotions on that occasion, would amount to about the sum of our national debt. Central Park was probably never so thronged before. It is estimated that during the day about 400,000 vain mortals aired their spring finery in its verdant paths and grand promenades

The display of the fancy Easter eggs was astonishingly rich this year, reminding one strongly of Parisian shop-windows at this season Easter eggs in the United States until a few years ago were the product of barn-yard fowls, hard boiled and colored at home in bright but solid hues, or printed by boiling in bags of calico warranted not to wash. New Orleans was one of the first of American cities to introduce the French fashion of artificial Paschal eggs highly ornamented and rich with hidden bonbons. New York City began to cater to the little people in these highly decorated and toothsome toys scarcely more than five years ago, but it has made rapid progress in the art. Every conceivable form of confectionery or fancy knick knack is now served up in the shape of an egg. Some big ones open to display to the eye of the delighted recipient a fully equipped work-box, a jewel case, a beautiful wax doll, or some costly trinket. The most sensible Easter egg I have heard of this year was one which a Wall street nabob had made for his daughter. It was plain and of ordinary size, but when broken by the curious young lady, poured into her lap a yellow stream of genuine gold dollars with which the doting parent had filled it full.

After a prolonged and costly wrangle and full half a dozen postponements of its sale, the Erie Railroad was brought to the block on Wednesday last and publicly auctioned for six millions of dollars Ex-Governor Morgan was the ostensible purchaser, but was only the agent of a Reconstruction Committee, who have a plan by which it is expected that the plundered victim of Jim Fisk and Jay Gould, the unfortunate road that has for years been the football of Wall street, will be again placed on a sound basis, and made a good paying property. The road which was here nominally sold for $6,000,000 has a stock liability of about $80,000,000, and a bond liability of over $50,000,000 additional, a large proportion of which indebtedness will have to be wiped out in the re-arrangement. It is also proposed to change the name of the road, although nothing definite has been decided on the subject.

The Erie Railway has been a scandal to American financial management. It has done more to destroy confidence at home and injure our character abroad than any other enterprise undertaken. Its affairs were involved in inextricable confusion, and after sinking the money of hard working people who bought shares in it, and the bonds it put on the market under false pretences, the creditors of the road found its affairs in a hopeless tangle of complications, which no lawyer could possibly unravel. The quarrels at the Erie meetings, and the contests of its litigants in court, have been disgraceful, and the operations of Gould and Fisk in manufacturing stock ad libitum, and using its funds to demoralize our politics and debauch Legislatures were simply infamous. The history of railway management furnishes no parallel to the chicanery and iniquity that have been developed by this road and the men who have controlled it. Its sale to a new company, with a prospective change in its entire management, awakens the hope that a new leaf is to be turned in its history, and that this great road will hereafter be conducted in an honorable manner and for the public benefit. If its new purchasers redeem the promise they have made to the public, the people of New York will have reasons to rejoice that the road has changed hands.

In the death of Wm. Orton, President of the Western Union Telegraph Company, this city has lost one of her greatest business geniuses. So strictly did Mr. Orton confine himself to his own affairs and so little ado did he make in the discharge of his immense duties, that public attention was seldom fixed upon him, and it was not until the whole press began to ring with his posthumous praises that we realized how important a man he was. His management of the Western Union was an almost unparalleled success. On his election to the presidency, the company was virtually bankrupt, and it was not until several years of his skillful and laborious administration that it came out into comparatively clear salting, and gave signs of becoming what it has since become, one of the most powerful and wide reaching corporations in the world

Mr. Orton's death, which was from apoplexy, the result of long continued overwork, was very sudden, he having been in perfect health up to within a few hours of his death. His funeral, which took place on Thursday, from Episcopal church of which he was a devoted member, was attended by a grand concourse of eminent mourners. Roscoe Conkling was one of the pall-bearers, and among the throng that assembled to do honor to his memory was included almost every man of local, political, commercial or social prominence.

The town is just now chuckling over rather a neat thing in police court justice. One day this week a man was caught in the act of carrying off a valuable load of lead pipe from a house belonging to a wealthy and well-known carpet manufacturer of the city. He was arrested and taken, plunder and all, before the nearest police justice, who on hearing the facts sent a messenger to the carpet manufacturer aforesaid, to come over to court, identify the property and make a charge against the thief, all in due form. But the owner refused to comply; he said the man had been stopped and the money recovered, which was all he cared about, and that he wouldn't take the time to make a complaint. This reply having been communicated to the court, word was sent back to the obdurate carpet man that it was necessary for him to prefer the charge or nothing could be done about the larceny; this second message received the same answer as before, namely, that the property had been recovered which was all he was interested in, and that he wouldn't be bothered with prosecuting the fellow. On receiving this second rebuff, the Justice turned to the prisoner and told him that there was no charge against him, and he could go. The lucky thief, who could hardly realize his good fortune in a case where the facts were so clearly against him, stared speechless at the judge for a minute, and then made a break for the door. "Hold on," said his Honor, "come back and take this lead pipe with you, there is no evidence before the Court that it does not belong to you." With a broad grin the ex-prisoner complied and at once made himself scarce, while the Court, amid the laughter and applause of the bystanders, calmly proceeded with its business.

It is not safe yet to inquire of that carpet maker wigther he has lost any lead pipe lately.

RADIX.

A Gentle Hint.

In our style of climate, with its sudden changes of temperature,—rain, wind and sunshine often intermingled in a single day,—it is wonder that our children, friends and relatives are so frequently taken from us by neglected colds, half the deaths resulting directly from this cause. A bottle of Boschee's German Syrup kept about your home for immediate use will prevent serious sickness, a large doctor's bill, and perhaps death, by the use of three or four doses. For curing Consumption, Hemorrhages, Pneumonia, Severe Coughs, Croup or any disease of the Throat or Lungs, its success is simply wonderful, as your druggist Geo. W. Crouter, will tell you. German Syrup is now sold in every town and village on this continent. Sample bottles for trial, 10c.; regular size, 75c.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Brigham Young's watch recently brought $500 at auction, and the watch-guard $300.

—Some one pronounces the earliest printed productions of Elizabeth Barrett Browning "pert, flippant and pretentious."

—Dean Swift proposed to lay female beauty, and to leave every lady to raise her own charms. He said the law would be cheerfully paid, and be very productive.

—Bishop Quintard, of Tennessee (Protestant Episcopal), has been elected a member of the Philosophical Society of Great Britain, of which the Earl of Shaftesbury is President.

—The salary of Lord Dufferin as Governor-General of Canada last year was $48,666. But the cost of maintaining his staff and of his trip to British Columbia brought the sum paid to him up to the Treasury up to $130,000.

—It is now said that the late Judge Leonard's visit to Cuba was neither for the purpose of investigating the negro stealing stories nor to win a wife. A friend of his declares that he was engaged to be married to the sister of his late wife, who is now in Europe with his two children.—N. Y. Evening Post, April 9th.

—Edward Wheeler, late of Nashua, N. H., who had all his life been a most economical person, lately astonished everybody by the directions he left for his burial. He had saved $17,000, and directed his executors to spend $6,000 on his funeral, including the cost of fitting up his burial lot. Before his death he had a gold coffin plate made at a cost of $100.

—Messrs. Moody and Sankey are entitled to large sums from the sales of their new hymn-books, but have steadily refused to touch the money, which, in England alone, amounts to $80,000. Hearing of an insinuation that his work was partly for pay, Mr. Moody said, recently: "If you want to attack me, just attack me there. I have weaknesses, but they are not in that direction. It I had come for money, it would have been in some other work."

—The Newburyport (Mass.) Herald reintes the following anecdote of Joaquin Miller: "A few years ago Mr. Miller came into the Herald office and asked the meaning of the word 'eyeclades,' pronouncing it in two syllables. He said it was a fine sounding word, and he wanted to use it in a poem he was about to publish. We gave the meaning and the pronunciation, which he did not fancy, whereupon we suggested 'cyclone,' and sure enough, soon after came out one of his striking poems wherein a cyclone was introduced as occurring in Oregon."

Flogging in Newgate.

Five young men, who were sentenced at the last session of the Central Criminal Court to be flogged for acts of robbery with violence, underwent the penalty in Newgate Jail, on the morning of March 21, at half-past nine o'clock. One of them, being a mere boy of sixteen, received twenty strokes with the birch instead of the cat. His name was Thomas Hayward, and his offense was being concerned with Edward Callahan, aged eighteen, in rubbing a woman, whom they brutally kicked. These youths were the first to take their punishment, which was inflicted in the room appointed for such correction, and fitted with the usual apparatus for whipping. The convicts were brought in one at a time, the nature of each and the number of lashes he was to receive being called out by the Governor.

First came the boy Donovan, who submitted quietly to the process of being stripped and fastened to the whipping-post. Two warders administered the twenty strokes of the birch, and the lad screamed and cried loudly for mercy while receiving his castigation, which was vigorously laid on, and left heavy marks of its severity. His older companion, Callahan, began to howl unseasonably, even before his cost was removed, and showed himself, from first to last, an arrant coward. His twenty strokes were laid on by the two warders, each delivering ten, with a pause, all whispered, with the prescribed number of words. The back of this convict bore evidences of the rigor with which the warders, two tall and powerful men, discharged their duty. As a matter of course, the prisoner, when he had shown craven fear by his cries, had set on being led into the room, doubled and trebled his yells when the blows began to rain across his back and shoulders.

The next batch, who were to suffer for a more violent outrage, had been sentenced to receive each twenty-five lashes with the cat. They were: Henry West, aged nineteen, a licensed pedaller; Thomas Hennessey, seventeen, and William Sankey, twenty, both described as laborers. All three attended to wanisworth, in which neighborhood, last November, their crime was committed. In conjunction with a fourth man, named Joseph Webb, who has been sentenced to seven years penal servitude without a flogging, they attacked an elderly gentleman, Mr. David Arnott, of Grove House, Allfarthing lane, as he was returning home at nine o'clock in the evening from a temperance meeting in South street. The first desperate performance of the ruffians was to take away their victim's umbrella, thus depriving him of a handy weapon of defense. They then proceeded to throw him down, and to rob him of £9 10s. in gold, his keys, purse and pocketknife, with a few postage stamps; and, so he persisted in calling for help, they kicked him about the head, causing eight wounds. For this savage robbery they were all sentenced by Sir Thomas Chambers, Q. C., M. P., the new Recorder, to penal servitude; and, as the three prisoners, West, Hennessey and Sawyer, had been previously convicted, the additional judgment of a flogging was pronounced on them.

West was first brought into the room, and his defiant look and insolent demeanor plainly bespoke a determination to go through the ordeal with as much stolidity as he could assume. It was not till the third lash descended that he cried out, and thereafter his yells were long and piercing, a solicitation for five minutes' respite being imploringly uttered by him when the first warder had finished giving the thirteen lashes, and the second was stepping forward to deliver the other twelve. The appeal was unheeded, and West continued to howl and roar for mercy till the end of his punishment; but immediately on being released from the contrivance if the whipping-stocks he dauced the "double shuffle," as in fulfillment of his miserable programme of bravado. It is noticeable that this convict had evidently received the utmost he can be lash with stubborn silence, and that his yells of pain were perforce wrung from him.

Hennessey, the next man, cried at the first cut, called for the doctor at the sixth, and then, simulating faint ness, dropped his head on one side but looked up briskly when the second warder came toward him to deliver the twelve concluding strokes. When the full measure of Hennessey's punishment had been administered, he gave a deep cough of relief, and was relieved moaning. The last man was Sawyer, who repeatedly shouted out that he was being killed, and whose flogging left him in a state of more decided helplessness and depression than either of the others had betrayed. In all cases, the laceration of the hide was very great, and blood followed the course of the lash. A period of not more than twenty minutes was occupied in flogging all five prisoners.—London Telegraph.

Electric Light.

About two years ago, Mr. J. H. Fuller invented and exhibited an electric machine for telegraphic purposes. It then occurred to him that the same apparatus might, with some changes, be made to produce an electric light, and, after considerable labor, he perfected his invention. It was in operation on Saturday evening, in the rear of Maltby's outer depot, at 61 Greenwich avenue. A small steam-engine furnishes the motive power for the machine, which is a very simple, consisting of an armature revolving between the poles of a powerful electromagnet. A strong current of electricity is thus generated. Two electric wires are attached to the machine, and they convey the electricity to the various burners. Each of these burners consists of two sticks of carbon, separated by a piece of glass which are attached, in an upright position, to the wires. The electricity is ignited by the application of an ordinary piece of wood to the burners. The light thus produced is dazzlingly brilliant and very beautiful, so far surpassing the ordinary gas-light that the latter looks yellow and dirty beside it. Any number of lights may be supplied by the same wires, and Mr. Fuller has succeeded in so subdividing the current of electricity that any one of the lights can be extinguished without affecting the others. This light is for more brilliant than any calcium light, and it illuminates the street for a block. One of these lights would illuminate a whole block, and far better, too, than a dozen or more of street lamps is lighted up a house, parlor or ground-floor shades are used for softening the glare of the light. The cost of production is very slight, much less than that of the ordinary gas.—N. Y. Sun.

"If I Should Die To-Night."

"If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face
Before they bind it in its resting place;
And foremost of the band of friends would come
And, laying snow white flowers against my cheek,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering caress.

It has been said that "the evil which men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones." We do not believe that this is generally true. It may be, in some desperate cases; but in most, it will be found to be just the reverse. Some one dies who, during mature life was regarded as hard, grasping and invariably uncharitable, "grinding the faces of the poor;" yet, standing by his coffin or speaking of his death, the very persons who most openly recognized his unlovely traits and unhesitatingly criticised them severely, are quick to recall many excellent acts that have hitherto passed unheeded.

"Yes," they say, "No doubt he loved money and knew well how to make and keep it; but we know he was the kindest person in his family, the most thoughtful of the interest and comfort of those in his employ. It was always supposed that he never gave liberally; probably he did not, for no doubt he was harassed by constant applications for aid, until he professed every one without examination. But—perhaps you remember—Andyet, in a quiet, unostentatious way, concealing from his left hand the good his right hand may have done, there is reason to believe that he was a benefactor to many who will yet rise up and call him blessed."

Death often kindly throws a veil over imperfections or wrong-doing, and in that solemn hour friends look upon the quiet face and dream as has "left it almost fair."

"My friends would call to mind with tender thought
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought,
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said,
Remembrance with the softening finger laid apart
The gloomy shades of my relations and mine,
My hasty words would all be put aside,
And so I might be loved and mourned to-night."

Looking thus upon the face of the dead, friends and neighbors who were quick to take offense—in haste to put false constructions on every careless act—may now in all honesty be led to examine their own hearts, and in the examination perhaps find that their anger is some degree responsible for much of the wrong-doing of one so soon to be hidden from their sight.

How many acts of the departed that annoyed and provoked them, have these friends not with impatience and rudeness? How sternly have they rebuked even trivial faults, or how icily silentness every attempt at an apology? As they stand over that still form they would recall each word, act, and find it been kind and gentle, had I listened patiently to the apology, accepting it as far as it could be done honestly, and offered words of kind cheer instead of censure, how much more influence I may have had to point out the wrong or show how to avoid it in future, what a change in all the surroundings, now closed, might have been effected! Had I been more noble, more Christ-like, how many of the mistakes of my friend's last years might never have occurred! Ah! more kindness, more open manifestations of my real affection, and that night have changed the whole life, but now—too late!

Yes, too late to remedy the wrong done; those who have passed away, but not too late for parents, brothers, sisters and friends to be warned and to profit by their self-upbraidings in those sad moments.

Many high-spirited children are ruined by the impatience of those who are set to guide and govern them, or by sharp rebukes or stinging ridicule, when standing just at that critical moment when a single word of encouragement could have piloted them safely past the breakers and guided them into still waters. How many who should have been helpers and saviors, for lack of skillful guidance in early life, if they reach the "farther shore" in safety, "scarcely so as by fire!"

Parents and friends are often neglectful of the many little things by which they could make home and its surroundings, or make happy and useful the lives of those who grow up under their guidance and influence. But it is only while they are with us that influence or affection has any effect. It may do us good to rouse up to a kindly and charitable interpretation of our friends when we stand by their coffins, but our love and grief or late repentance can no longer benefit them. Of course all the manifestations of affection and just appreciation of their good qualities to that home when for them it will be all a vain show! We do not know—we cannot imagine without the most careful and earnest watchfulness how many hearts silently ache for some tangible evidence of love and interest, or how, in secret troubles and trials, in seasons of great bitterness of spirit, such demonstrations would give strength and courage to preserve and bring comfort and joy unspeakable.

Then, friends! love tonight,
Kiss and smile kisses for me cold and blue,
While yet I feel them not, for I am near,
Think gentle of me, I am tried sore,
By faltering for one moment in unseen chains,
When darkness was in store I shall be freed
And, loving, shall be loved in heaven.
—Mrs. H. W. Beecher, in Christian Union.

A Tramp's Dinner.

The New York Sun tells a good story of a sad-eyed tramp who accosted several well-known New Yorkers in Park Row. They gave him a magnificent glance, and he was about to move away when Campbell's heart was touched by the manner of the stranger. "Your look hungry," said he. "Go right into Moynahan's and order what you want, and I'll pay for it."

A dubious smile broke over the careworn face. "They'll think I'm lying and kick me out," was the reply.

"I'll make him all right," said the benevolent Campbell, turning to Moynahan. "Here, Patsey, you give the poor fellow what he wants, and I'll foot the bill."

The sad-eyed tramp murmured his thanks and followed Moynahan into the dining-room. He took his seat at the table, called for a napkin, ate for an hour and twenty minutes, and departed. The following is the bill:

What he got.	What Campbell paid.
A porterhouse steak	$ 60
Potatoes potatoes	10
Plate of raw tomatoes	15
Plate of fried oysters	25
Two cups of coffee	20
Dish of fresh trout	25
A little lobster salad	40
Some cake pastries	20
A Cinderette House	40
A quart bottle of dry Verzenay	3 00
Pousse-cafe	25
A whole Reina Victoria	2 00
One bundle of toothpicks	5
Total	$ 8 35

Campbell paid the footing, but declared that in the future he should limit all tramps to corned beef and cabbage.

It is the calculation of the New York Sun that the liquor traffic of that city can be made by the Moffett law to yield $12,000,000 a year.

An Interesting Group of Monkeys.

Four chimpanzees and one orang-outang may now be seen at the New-York Yorik Aquarium. A more interesting group of animals it would be difficult to imagine, although the thoughtful spectator can scarcely help feeling a little uncomfortable when he looks upon these creatures so like and yet so unlike man. The eldest of the chimpanzees is nine years old, the others are four years younger. The nine-year-older is three feet high, his younger fellows are a foot shorter, but they do not think any less of themselves on that account. They look like a lot of very old men, wizened and shriveled by the lapse of two or three centuries, but with the glittering eyes and agility of youth. They have each other past like children, and cry when they are cross or hurt, in tones that are startlingly human. Their affection for their keeper is evidently great. They cry if he does not pay attention to them, and, at a word from him, leap into his arms and nestle closely to his breast. Their caresses are grotesque, but fervent, and it is scarcely too much to say that they behave as if they knew the difference in favor so marked that no one would think of eating green field corn if any of the sweet corn that they so much relish could be obtained. It may also be noticed that the more the grain shrivels when mature, the better the flavor when it is green. For instance, the green corn full of milk, but shrinks to one-fourth the size when ripe and dry. It is a low sort, but of excellent flavor. The very early dwarf sorts of sweet corn are, it is true, better than the common varieties of field corn for the table; but, as a rule, they are far inferior to the medium or later sorts.

Another thing which most farmers neglect is a succession of any kind of vegetables, which can be readily secured by making several plantings at different times. If one has need of an early and late sort of the same kind, the seeds of the two may be put into the ground at the same time; but if he wishes for a short, then a small quantity should be put in at intervals of a week or two, in order to prolong the season. This plan is especially recommended for sweet corn, as they remain in condition for the table only for a very short period, at best, ripe-blog the rapid after reaching a suitable condition; and this brings us to a point where a word about green peas may be opportune, lest the whim of "first" be with sheer in regard to the varieties of sweet-corn is quite as applicable to the different sorts of the garden-peas. We have, of course, the early sort for is of much value for the table, although they are extensively cultivated for market-gardening purposes. The best for a poorly-flavored pea to none. Residents of cities are often compelled to put up with inferior sorts in the vegetables, but the farmer can and should have the very best of everything of this kind for the table. If he engages to be, larger or smaller, but all are good and worthy of a place in a garden.

The second thing in order for making gardens, it is well to look over the list of kinds of vegetables which are attainable and consider the matter, and then estimate the area of land needed to produce a full supply throughout the season, as well as the quantity of each will probably be required. The land occupied with early peas, spinach and similar short-lived plants can be utilized later in the season for cabbages, celery, turnips, or a full crop of spinach. But the first requisite of a good vegetable garden is a very rich and deep soil, for without this success will be just as impossible in any climate and with it success is good a variety of seeds.—N. Y. Sun.

—While Theodore Tilton was lecturing in Scottsboro, Pa., a few evenings ago, the town Hotel burned, beginning at a report that a child was dead, and a gas explosion was the cause. This greatly annoyed the lecturer, and, rubbing one hand across the forehead, he said: "It is within the power of every man to do his duty as the man that is singing that bell appears to be doing his, and I hope there may be half as much fresh air before me before as he seems to be getting in your city." A gentleman in the audience volunteered an explanation and the lecture went on.

—The official designation of the new silver coin is "standard silver dollars." They are shipped from the mint in kegs, each keg containing five bags, and each bag $1,000.

VEGETINE
For Dropsy.

DR. H. R. STEVENS:
It is a pleasure to give my testimony for your valuable medicine. I was sick for a long time with dropsy, under the doctor's care. He said I was WITH between the HEART and LIVER. I improved so much until I was encouraged. I have used VEGETINE in fact I was never well before. No one can feel more thankful than I do.
I am, dear sir, gratefully yours,
A. P. WHEELER.

VEGETINE When the blood becomes thickened, sluggish, or impure, the whole system is affected. Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Sores, Pimples, Humors of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Headache, Constipation, Costiveness, Kidney Complaints, and all diseases arising from impure blood, will receive the most speedy relief when the VEGETINE is faithfully taken. It has no equal as a blood purifier. It is the only medicine that will remove the cause of disease from the system, thereby the bowels and kidneys, thereby the blood, and thus cleanse the stomach, regulate the bowels and impart a tone of vigor to the whole body.

VEGETINE
For Kidney Complaint and Nervous Debility.

MR. STEVENS: RICHMOND, ME., Dec. 28, 1877.
Dear Sir—I had had a CROOK in my back for years. I commenced taking the VEGETINE. I was very low my system was so debilitated that I had the KIDNEY COMPLAINT and was very nervous—could not sleep nights. I had taken many remedies, but they did me no good. I was induced by friends and neighbors to try VEGETINE. I have taken seven bottles, and have not had a pain since. I have not been troubled with my nerves since I commenced taking the VEGETINE. I know of no everything it is recommended to be.
Yours truly, S. PENDLETON.

VEGETINE is unrivalled and strengthening; purifies the blood; regulates the bowels; quiets the nervous system; acts directly upon the secretions, and arouses the whole system to action.

VEGETINE
For Sick Headache.

EVANSVILLE, IND., Jan. 1, 1878.
DEAR SIR: I have used your VEGETINE for SICK HEADACHE, and have found it a perfect cure. I have every reason to believe it is a good medicine.
Yours very respectfully,
MRS. JAMES DAWSON, 411 Third street.

HEADACHE.—There are various causes for headache, as derangement of the circulating system, of the digestive organs, of the nervous system, etc. VEGETINE has been found a perfect remedy in the many kinds of Headache, as it acts specifically upon the blood and all the complaints originating from impure blood, such as Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, etc. Try the VEGETINE. You will not regret it.

VEGETINE
Doctor's Report.

DR. HARLES M. STEVENS, Apothecary.
The Doctor writes: "I have a large number of customers who take VEGETINE, and they all speak well of it. I have it as a good tonic as for the complaints for which it is recommended.
Iowa, Feb. 27, 1877.

VEGETINE is a great panacea for our aged fathers and mothers. So it gives them strength, quiets their nerves, and gives them a sweet sleep.

VEGETINE
Doctor's Report.

H. R. STEVENS, Esq.:
DEAR SIR: I have been selling your valuable VEGETINE for some time, and find it to be giving entire satisfaction. We believe it to be the best blood Purifier now sold. Very truly yours,
DR. J. E. BROWN & CO., Druggists.
Ironton, Ohio, Feb. 27, 1877.

VEGETINE has never failed to effect a cure, giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

The best farmer is the farmer who cultivates himself.

A good garden is the imperative demand of every farmer's family, and the privilege of every farmer.

—English experience is that the consumption of a ton of roots produces, on the average, fourteen pounds of mutton or of beef.

—A pail of milk standing ten minutes where it is exposed to the scent of a strong smelling stable or any other offensive odor will imbibe a taint that will never leave it.

—The manure, if all saved, from a ton of hay and economically returned to the land, will grow more than a ton next year. If kept wet and so our agriculture would be a humbug, and the world would starve.—N. Y. Herald.

—Minute Pudding.—Put three pints of sweet milk and two gills of the rye in a porcelain kettle, or something that with a good deal more than hold it. Salt it, and the minute it boils stir in enough to make a thick batter. It will proliten. Take it quickly from the fire and serve hot, with butter and sugar or syrup.

—Apple Cake.—Take two empsoirred apples; stew just enough to chop easily; chop as fine as raisins and boil in two cups of molasses till preserved through; drain off the molasses, then add two eggs, one cup of butter, one cupful sour milk, two teaspoonfuls of soda, the stew when ripe and dry. It is a low sort, but of excellent flavor. The very early dwarf sorts of sweet corn are, it is true, better than the common varieties of field corn for the table; but, as a rule, they are far inferior to the medium or later sorts.

—Tapioca Pudding.—One cup tapioca, one quart milk, five eggs, whites and yelks beaten separately, two tablespoons of melted butter and two of sugar. Soak the tapioca in enough cold water to cover it two hours, drain off water not absorbed, soak two hours in the milk slightly warmed. When the tapioca is quite soft beat the sugar and butter together; add the yelks, the milk and tapioca, lastly the whites. Stir well. Bake in a buttered dish. Eat warm with a sweet sauce.

Wealth is accumulated more in saving than by earning.

Manual labor is the original and divinely-appointed mode of living.

Asparagus seed has a hard hull, consequently it should be soaked for twenty-four hours in warm water.

Never attempt to find a country where you can farm and get rich without hard labor and active brains.

If you want to make a rich farm, sow clover. If you want a rich clover, sow clover.

Never pay a man for his time, but ever pay him for his labor. One of the poorest saws ever uttered was that "time is money."

Rotted sods from the pasture, and rotted cow-manure, well and thoroughly mixed, make good soil for potting flowers.

There is no longer any excuse for able-bodied pauperism. Millions of acres of fruitful soil, lying idle, invite them afield.

They who have nothing to do, or will do nothing, are the most wretched of mortals, and their virtue is always doubtful.

Be gentle with the cows. Every excitement that causes the blood to flow faster in the veins of the cow, every indiction of pain and every cause of fear, fans, in that cow, the fire which is fed with butter.

Beautiful Calves.

This is a barbarous, but it seems to be a necessary, practice. A large proportion of the calves are each year knocked in the head, or "dressed veal," as it is called, at a very early stage of their existence. The question sometimes arises, how soon should the cow be deprived of her calf? From the question follows, what is the effect upon the cow of killing her young offspring? It is a violation of the plain intent of nature, and a shock to her natural instincts—is the effect injurious to the cow?

If cornas the calf is killed out of purely mercenary considerations. Near large cities, where there is already demand for veal at remunerative prices, it may pay to fat the calf, giving it a liberal supply of new milk at first, and gradually lowering skimmed milk, buttermilk, whey or whatever else is found, as it becomes able to bear it. By this time it is fit for veal, it is probably of very little value from the cow and the cow from it. But even when fatted for veal, the question arises, how long is it best to let the calf feed from the cow's udder? Some say only once or twice, or until the milk gets fit for use; some say for a week or ten days, and some let it suck until it is fit for veal.

If the cow and calf are to be separated at all, it would seem to be better to separate them very soon. The longer the calf runs with the cow, the more she gets attached to it, and the more any nervous system is shocked by the separation when it comes. If deconsed at once, never perhaps getting upon its feet, and taken immediately from the sight of the cow, she seems to mind very little about it. If she does not see it at all, she does not seem to mind it all; and many men of experience and good judgment think it better to never let the calf suck, while some think it actually injurious to let the calf suck and limit the inflamed udder. Yet this would seem to be the provision of Nature. We should bear in mind, however, that the cow is kept in such an artificial condition, and the development and activity of the milk glands are so stimulated that Nature is completely perverted. Hence may follow inflammation and swelling that make it actually injurious to follow out the dictates of Nature in letting the calf suck.

Some of the breeders of fancy stock allow the calf to suck only a few days, and then weaning and teach to drink, while others keep cows from common stock as nurses for these calves. All, both breeders and dairymen, find it desirable to separate the calf from the cow at an early day. The united testimony seems to favor the earliest separation as the best for the cow. When the separation is immediate, before any special attachment has been awakened, the cow turns her affection to the milker, and seems entirely satisfied with this. After all, perhaps this is about as near the natural condition of the cow as we can get. She has been bred to this treatment for centuries, until she has become naturalized or accustomed to it. The old woman's eels got used to skinning.

The disposal of the carcasses of deceased calves is of some importance. They should by no means be allowed to lie around the barn in sight of the cows, tainting the air as they slowly decay. Buried in the manure heap, they should be buried in it and not thrown on it, and some sort of absorbent should be thrown on and around them to take up and retain the gases as they are eliminated in the process of decomposition. There is no doubt considerable fertilizing material in these carcasses. If they could be at once reduced to the form of a commercial fertilizer, it would be a great saving. The meat is sometimes saved and dried and used for feeding fish. It is said to be good for this purpose.—American Fairgrown.

Wheat Market.

THERE are so many complications in the market—so many rings and combinations will be made here—so many pools and variations in railroad and ocean freights—so many war rumors, peace prospects, crop reports, etc., affect prices, that no one knows what is the future prospect or probability of wheat. The questions to be decided in settling the advisability of holding or selling wheat are so many-sided and almirase—so profound and recondite, that the opinions of commercial and agricultural editors are of as little use in directing farmers as are the opinions of lawyers and doctors in settling the weather. And yet a gentleman and scholar (like ourselves) does not want to show any want of decision in replying to anxious inquirers. A good, earnest farmer, who has 2,000 bushels of wheat on hand, inquires whether he had "best-sell now, or wait for the results of the European war-clouds are settled." To show our decision, we would say we think he had better.

Many would not give such advice without feeling some misgivings. But one who has been studying the wheat question so closely as the writer has for a quarter of a century, ought to be as positive as to the future of that valuable commodity as are the glaziers in the present day about the question of future rewards and punishments. We assure our earnest correspondent that there are some questions in commerce as well as theology that the more we inquire and investigate the more we believe. While we are returning to the clumsy old dollar, let us try some of the old practices of our fathers. Our friend should go to his barn, and draw around him on the floor with chalk twelve circles, and write in each circle one of the months of the year. Then should he cry, repeat:

"Ist spit, spat, ruling Fate,
Tell me when to sell my wheat."

Then split his left hand, and strike the spit with two fingers of his right hand, and when or circle the spit falls on will be the month to sell the wheat. And you will be sure to get your pay in the dollar of the fathers.—Iowa State Register.

—The Toronto Mail draws this gloomy picture of the condition of Canada: "Immigration has practically ceased, though $200,000 a year is spent on the work; but the emigration of our people to the United States has not ceased, and ever since the close of the war. Business of all kinds is practically at a standstill, and the commercial outlook is yet dark and depressing. The country has no confidence in the Finance Minister, and will have no confidence in Reid. No class of the community is prosperous; there is none but deplores its accumulating misfortunes and bewails National decay and decline. For the first time in our history, honest men willing to work are unable to find work to do; and hunger and wretchedness become factors in society."

Dogs in Boots.

"Puss in Boots" is a mythical personage, but the dog in boots is no imaginary creature. In the regions of eternal snow and ice, where the only beast of burden is the dog, the cold is sometimes so intense that sharp icicles form between the claws of the canine sledge travelers. This causes a most serious obstacle to the speedy progression of the dogs, and would, after a few days, render them utterly unfit for their laborious duties, as the icicles grow larger and larger as they go on, until the poor creatures are quite unable to stand. The older dogs, however, will every now and then stop and bite off the icicles from their feet. Not so with the novices. The trudges wearily along; every step he takes adds to his torture, and after a time every imprint of his foot on the snow bears a red stain from his cut and bleeding paws. At such times the dog-leader is called into requisition by the driver, principally for policy, but occasionally, let us hope, out of humanity. The dog-boot is generally made of raw-hide, and is simply shaped like a small bag or pocket. This is drawn over the foot of the animal and made secure by tying it round the ankle with a leather string. When protected, if the surface of the snow is pretty level, these wonderful Esquimaux dogs will travel at the rate of forty miles a day for many days in succession.—Journal of Chemistry.

The Gramme magneto-electric machine has now for a considerable time past been employed for supplying light at the houses of Parliament in London, and an idea of its power may be gathered from the fact, as stated, that it is worked by a steam engine at a distance of some 480 feet from the point at which the light is produced, the current being conducted thither by copper wires one-sixth of an inch in diameter. The magnets in the machine are arranged upon three massive rectangular blocks, and make 380 revolutions per minute, at a speed of two and one-thirds horse power, and give a light equal to over 3,000 English standard candles.

A YOUNG man, recently married, who has been an enthusiastic collector of coins, found that his wife, with the charming freshness characteristic of brides, has been drawing on his cabinet for change, and, among other things, had passed out an old penny for which he paid $3.50, for 4 cents' worth of candy. That years "rubbish" more in that household than any previous investment of the same amount of money.

Jewels of the Crown of Scotland.

At Edinburg, Scotland, some years since, the jewels of the crown were locked in a box, the box put in another, and so on, until there were supposed to be burglar-proof. They were then locked in the vault of the castle, there to remain for one hundred years, the key being placed in a mortar and fired into the sea. At the end of the century the vault was opened, and the jewels of the crown were found in a box, which had been packed

Legislature, and any one interested, should remember that important changes were made in the State liquor law, at the last session of the Legislature, which really go into effect, practically, this year for the first. Among other provisions, dealers in liquors, fermented or spirituous, or patent medicines containing liquors, must give bonds to the County Treasurer, on or before the first day of May, as stated by us recently. On examining the session laws of 1877, page 232, we observe that no person shall sell liquor "after the first Wednesday succeeding the third Monday in in May, until he has first notified, in writing, the assessing officer, whose duty it would be to assess the tax herein above provided to be levied on such business, that he intends to commence the same (naming the time when and the place where) provided, he has also paid to the County Treasurer of the proper county the full amount of the tax therefor required by the act." Heavy penalties are provided for violations of the law.

In 1860 times were good and money plush. At that time the circulating medium was $207,000,000, the largest amount the country had except for a brief period in the years of 1865-7. To day, we are told, times are hard and money scarce. Yet the circulating medium is now $726,000,000—more than three times greater than it was in 1860.

The republican party has always favored the policy of having only one standard of money, or making all the dollars in use of equal value. It stands on that platform to day. It has seen the greenback dollar rise from less than 40 cents to over 99 cents specie; and it would appear to be the height of foolishness in workingmen, who need every cent in their dollar, to vote for any party or favor any policy which will pull down the worth of their earnings.

The liver is the imperial organ in the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 14th day of January A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Youmans, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Addie E. Hayes may be appointed executor thereof. Thereupon, it is ordered, that Saturday, the 24th day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, there to be holden, at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition, and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix SENTINEL, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

Notice.

To the members of the Republican County Committee:

You are hereby notified that there will be a meeting of the committee at the Town Hall, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th inst., at twelve o'clock M., for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of calling a convention to appoint a delegate to the State Convention, that meets in the city of Detroit on the 13th day of June. Also to arrange the appointment of representation of the several towns in the convention for the nomination of county officers, and to make some provisions for the appointment of delegates to the Congressional, Senatorial and Representative Conventions; and any other business that may properly be considered by them for the advancement of the cause of the good old party in Charlevoix county. A full attendance is desirable. The towns of Hudson, Springvale, Bear Lake, Melrose and Hayes having been organized, since the appointment of the county committee, leave in consequence no appointed members of the committee; therefore the chairman of the committee would suggest that each of the new towns appoint a good man to meet and consult with the other members. ROUNDY MILLER.

Charlevoix, May 10, 1878. Chairman.

THE Gazelle is expected daily.

A Snow storm Friday morning, last.

S. S. LISCOMB has removed his jewelry establishment to the Chamberlain building.

THE Township Board of Charlevoix have fixed the bonds of liquor dealers and druggists at $3,000.

A lady of Charlevoix recently passed a trade dollar for a "three dollar silver piece," at an establishment in town, and got her "right change back," too.

HANNAH & MILLER come from Beaver Island Thursday, for the purpose of putting down a pound net near the north point.

REMEMBER you can buy Building Hardware, doors and windows very reasonable of Carpenter & Bartholomew.

DIED.—Another old settler of this region has passed from life. Mrs. Samuel Horton, of Evangeline, died on the 7th. She has resided in this county for 22 years.

Almon, young son of Andrew Nowland, who was living with Perry Brewith, at Elk Rapids, died last week of diphtheria.

Paul Wood, an old resident of Banks, died on Thursday, of inflamation of the Bowels.

DO NOT fail to call at the "ready pay" store of Carpenter & Bartholomew's before making your purchases. They can save you money.

The Charlevoix Sentinel has just entered upon its tenth volume. It seems scarcely possible that well printed and 2-column paper has existed for ten years past in the extreme northwestern part of the lower peninsula, but such is the fact. And the paper was never better edited and never better deserved than it does to-day, the strong support which, we are glad to note, it is receiving.

A SWIM AND A CLOTH.—Sam See and Jack Ingalls were Thursday engaged in swing off the piles of the bridge substructure below water, and were working on a cedar lighter fastened across the stream. It was fastened, one end to the pile upon which the gentlemen were working, and the other was held by a line from the shore to the lower side of the lighter. As Jack was spinning a yarn as long as his legs, the upper side of the lighter settled below the surf, or the water and hastily went on her leaner's side. Sam undertook to unfasten the line and let the float right up, but failed, and was left to swim ashore, which he did. Of course the spectators had a laugh at Sam's expense, at the same time being conscious of his danger. Rather than swim Jack took to a pile, which stood ten feet above the water. The ludicrousness of his appearance, with his numerous sections of legs wrapt around that unpile pile, and his struggles to reach the top, were better than any circus. He reached the top in time to launch an invective at the innocent head of our reporter, who stood upon the shore, note book in hand. As the notes of Jack's voice died away, we heard another sound upon the able walk, which was like ker-chu-lash! ker-chu-lash! ker-chu-lash!" and the retreating figure of Sam passed down over the hill to change his clothes.

Marine.

—The following named vessels left this port yesterday—Mariner, H. Esch; Nellie Winieck, M. N. Dunham and Alaska for Milwaukee—Geo. W Wescott for Kenosha—Hercules for Racine—all loaded with wood and bark—Now in Port Elgin, Maple Leaf and Emma.

We shall receive by the Fountain City this week our spring stock of dry goods, clothing, hats and caps. We intend to show the people of Charlevoix as nice a stock of dry goods and clothing that was ever brought to this town.

CHARLEVOIX SUMMER RESORT.—The Committee of Michigan and Indiana gentlemen recently appointed to settle the business affairs of the Resort generally arrived here Wednesday morning, and consisted of H. W. Page, S. A. Gibson and F. M. Lyon, of Kalamazoo, and Messrs Carter and Gordon, of Fort Wayne Ind. The Committee remained during the day, and made a thorough examination and survey of the proposed Resort. Each member of the Committee expressed himself highly pleased with the location and there is no doubt that the matter is definitely settled. We are informed by the Committee that improvements will be commenced upon the grounds within one month and several cottages erected.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 23d, the amendment of the House to the bill granting a pension to Gen. Shields, increasing the amount from fifty dollars to $100 a month, was refused. The House bill to prohibit the coinage of the twenty-cent silver piece was passed. The bill to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific railroad was further considered, and actively discussed, but was not disposed of when the Senate adjourned. In the House, the Speaker ordered the protest against the summary passage of the Harbor bill to be read, but no longer objected to words referring to alleged combinations of members for the spoliation of the Treasury, and Mr. Dox (N. Y.), without their portion of the protest, and proceeded to address the House, in which objection was made, after considerable debate, and more confusion, the Speaker put the question as to whether the gentleman from New York should be allowed to proceed, and declared it carried. Bill to Mr. Dox proceeded to comment on the objection declaring that, "And this encourages similar attempts on the Treasury to passify local interests" but the Speaker ruled that they were not disposed of in the House. The reading of the protest having been concluded, a number of hours were spent in personal, wordy controversies between different members, after which it was decided that the protest did not present a question of privilege. Feb. 24, same, Senate, that, as a matter of courtesy to those who signed the protest, it be entered on the journal, was then suspended. The report of the Conference Committee on the Harbor Bill for examining rivers in the Treasury Department was agreed to, a compromise having been effected. The Legislative Appropriation bill was reported and referred to Committee of the Whole.

The report of the Conference Committee on the House bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to employ temporary clerks was agreed to, and the bill was passed, in the Senate, on the 24th. A bill was also passed to amend the law in relation to the duties on sugars. Bills were passed in the house relieving the appointees of the Light-House Board over the Illinois River for the establishment of lights, buoys, etc., providing that the Board shall, once every vessel of the United States may be the form which the vessel was built or where the owner resides. Senate Funding bill in regard to the Pacific railroads was considered in the usual unspecified hour, when the bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole. The report of the Conference Committee on the Naval Appropriation bill was made and agreed to.

DOMESTIC.

THE property and franchises of the Erie Railroad were sold, on the 25th, to ex-Gov. Morgan, of New York, for $6,000,000.

AT Catasauqua, Pa., a few days ago, a night-rope performer, while walking backward over a rope, missed his footing and fell to the ground, a distance of fifty feet, and was fatally injured.

A MAN, aged about fifty years, leaped from the new suspension bridge into the river at Niagara Falls, on the 25th. There was an envelope in the pocket of his coat addressed to Edward M. Great, Waterford, Racine County, Wisconsin.

A WASHINGTON dispatch of the 26th states that the amount of United States notes retired during the month of April, in consequence of the issue of National Bank notes, would be about $1,220,001. The Secretary of the Treasury had ordered this amount to be restored by other dollars to be paid out in the course of business. This sum would be distributed among the various Sub-Treasuries and public depositories, so that, to this extent, the silver dollar will be paid out on currency obligations. This will not interfere with or counter the silver dollars in exchange at par for gold coin at any time.

A NEW and very dangerous counterfeit $100 bill, of the issue of the Merchants' National Bank, of New Bedford, Mass., was detected in St. Louis, Mo., on the 20th ult. The general appearance of the bill is said to be good and calculated to deceive, the seal alone being poorly executed.

AN explosion of the gas-main leading into the Detroit Free Press building, took place on the 20th ult., and the gas ignited and set the edifice on fire. Great damage was done to the premises and printing material belonging to the Free Press Company. The job-room material was entirely destroyed.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

HON. GEO. C. GORHAM, of California, has been chosen Secretary of the Republican Congressional Committee.

On the 23d, the Senate, in Executive session, reconsidered the vote refusing to confirm J. E. Colburn as Consul-General to Mexico, and voted to confirm by a good majority.

A JACKSONVILLE (Fla.) dispatch of the 23d says McLin, member of the Florida Returning Board at the last Presidential election, and L. G. Dennis, member of the Republican State Central Committee, had confessed that perjury and fraud had been resorted to to secure the Electoral vote of that State for Mr. Hayes.

IT was announced from Detroit, on the 24th, that Hon. Isaac McCoskry, of Michigan, had decided not to go to Europe, as he had intended, but would return to Detroit at once and insist upon an investigation of the charges of immorality preferred against him, which charges he denounced as unqualified false.

GEORGE F. SMITH, formerly member of the National House of Representatives from Louisiana, has been nominated to be Collector of the Port of New Orleans. This is said to have been a compromise nomination.

PRESIDENT ex-Mgr. HAYES, accompanied by the Secretaries of the Treasury and Interior and their wives, reached Philadelphia, on the 26th, in response to invitations extended by the Municipal Government and the National Union League of that city. They met with a very cordial and enthusiastic reception during their three days' sojourn in the city.

THE New York State Prohibition Convention met at Albany, on the 24th, and nominated Hon. Daniel E. Danford as a candidate for Judge of the Court of Appeals. Resolutions were adopted demanding the prohibition of the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors; protesting against the proposed Moffett Bell-Punch act, favoring the enfranchisement of women, opposing the National Banking system; favoring currency expansion, etc., etc.

A STATE Prohibition Convention has been called to meet at Detroit, on the 6th of June, to nominate candidates for State officers, etc.

WILLIAM EVARTS, son of the Secretary of State, died at Washington, on the 26th, of consumption. He was twenty-seven years old.

THE Indiana State Republican Convention has been called to meet at Indianapolis, on the 5th of June.

IT was said, on the 29th ult., to be the opinion of several members of the Ways and Means Committee of the National House of Representatives, that a bill to impose a tax on incomes of over $2,000 cannot pass the House.

IN the United States Circuit Court, at San Francisco, on the 29th ult., Judge Sawyer rendered a decision that a Chinaman is not a white person within the meaning of the term as used in the Naturalization laws, and is not entitled to become a citizen. The case will probably be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States.

FOREIGN.

AN Adrianople telegram of the 24th says the Sultan's forces were decimating the Russian troops in the vicinity of Adrianople and Roshuta.

A VIOLENT gale prevailed in the Black Sea, on the 24th. A Turkish corvette, with ninety men on board, sank during the height of the storm. There were no survivors.

PRINCE CHARLES, of Roumania, has refused to accede to the demand of Russia for the dismissal and reconstruction of his Cabinet.

THE Porte has peremptorily ordered the evacuation of Batoum on the Black Sea.

THE Pope issued an encyclical, on the 25th, confirming and renewing the protests of Pope Pius IX against the encroachments on the civil rights of the Papacy.

A LONDON dispatch of the 25th says the Government had rejected the scheme for the simultaneous withdrawal of the British fleet and the Russian armies, for the reason that British acceptance of this proposition would be a practical admission of the correctness of the limits assigned by Russia to New Bulgaria. The impression prevailed at London, as well as at Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Paris and Constantinople, that war was inevitable and that nothing short of a miracle could prevent it.

ACCORDING to a St. Petersburg dispatch of the 29th, Russia and Great Britain had agreed upon the simplicity of an exchange of views on the present status of the Eastern question before the meeting of the Congress. It was stated that Austria, Germany and Italy also favored this course, and had called upon the British Cabinet to state its views.

A CONSTANTINOPLE telegram of the 30th says seditious meetings were nightly held in that city, and a general uprising was feared. Ex-Sultan Murad had recovered his health, and was looked upon as the coming ruler. He was closely watched and constantly guarded.

ACCORDING to Constantinople telegrams of the 29th, the insurrectionary movement in Roumelia was assuming huge proportions. The Turkish irregulars were pouring into the disaffected districts, and Russian troops in large numbers were marching to oppose them. Hussein Pasha, the insurgent Commander, had met the Russians and withdrawn after a bloody encounter. A Russian force pouring through a defile in the mountains had suffered heavily from the fire of insurgents in ambush. At Philippopolis, 1,000 Russians had been taken prisoners, and large quantities of guns and stores captured. About 30,000 Irregulars held Batoum and refused to surrender.

EXCITING rumors prevailed in London, on the night of the 26th, to the effect that the Russians and British in front of Constantinople had come in collision. Details were wanting.

A BUCHAREST telegram of the 27th says Russia had announced that she would probably occupy that city. The pretext for this step was said to be that it was an act of precaution to maintain order.

THE Statement was made, on the 28th, that Germany was seeking the neutralization of the Baltic in the event of war.

THE boiler in Stroup's foundry, in Dublin, Ireland, exploded, on the 27th, destroying the adjoining buildings, killing fifteen persons and seriously injuring twelve others.

A CONSTANTINOPLE telegram of the 29th ult. states that the Turkish troops had refused to surrender to the Russians the quadrilateral fortresses of Silistria and Varna.

THE Grand Duke Nicholas has been promoted to the Field-Marshalship of the Empire, and ordered to St. Petersburg. He was relieved, on the 28th ult., by Gen. Todleben. The object of the Grand Duke's recall is said to be to lessen the friction and reduce the danger of collision.

A BELGRADE dispatch of the 29th ult. says that frontier fortifications of Servia, on the Austrian border, were being rapidly augmented.

A BERLIN telegram of the 29th ult. states that Italy would make a descent on the Albanian coast if Austria invaded Bosnia and Herzegovina, as their appeal probable.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—The pastor of the Presbyterian Church, at Vernon, N. Y., was asked to resign, but he refused. The sexton was ordered under no circumstances to open the doors, and the minister proceeded to hold services at his residence.

—Senator Morrissey can scarcely sleep at all when lying down. He resorts to a bed or lounge occasionally only for muscular or nervous repose. What sleep he gets is had when sitting upright in a chair or half reclining.—N. Y. Paper.

—An English writer states that he was much impressed with the gentleness of American manners. He ought to see a Fourth of July row at our cottages, or try getting out of a crowded depot with two grip-sacks when our hackmen are feeling well.—Brooklyn Table.

—There lives six miles from Richmond, Va., Mrs. Martha T. Hopkins, who is only thirty-nine years old and has just been married for her sixth husband. She was first married at twenty years of age; took her second husband when twenty-four years old; her third husband when twenty-seven years old; her fourth husband when thirty-two years old, and her fifth husband when thirty-seven years old.

—The story is told of Gov. Hampton, of South Carolina, that while preparing his first message, during which he occupied many days and nights owing to the important problems with which it had to deal, he was asked by a very ambitious expression; and on Sunday, the day before the document was to be delivered, he was surprised to see the wood on it, while his family went to church. The family, or their return, to their great relief were received by the Governor with a countenance beaming with satisfaction. "What is the matter?" asked one. "Have you completed your message?" "No!" was the Governor's joyful reply; "but I have found the old turkey-hen's nest over yonder in the woods."—N. Y. Evening Post.

—One of the oldest and best known, as well as best light-house keepers on the Atlantic coast, is a woman, Mrs. Lebanon Andre Moore, of Black Rock Light-house, near Bridgeport, Ct. She is sixty-five, has tended the light-house lamp for fifty years and lives alone in her little house with two dogs and a pet lamb. She says there used to be many more wrecks than there are now on her coast, before sailing ships were replaced by steamers. She is as active as a girl of fifteen. There are several hundred printed rules for the instruction of lighthouse and live-saving station-keepers, and this bright old woman knows them all by heart. She is a great reader, and prizes particularly Shakespeare, the British poets and books of travel and history. She has more than 1,000 visitors in her little house last summer.—Chicago Tribune.

—A Mr. Patrick, who was one of Representative James A. Garfield's earliest friends, in giving a sketch of his career to some school-children, several years ago, said: "I want to tell you about a young man who came to my farm-house from the canal. He had been a canal-boat driver, and as the canal had just frozen up, he wanted to do chores for his board during the winter. James, for that was his name, was a stalwart, honest-looking fellow, and as I took him in. My own children soon began attending school, and I asked James if he did not want to go to school with them. So he did. I soon noticed that he seemed to be quite despondent, and asked him if he was troubled about anything, and he then confessed to me that, although he was nineteen years of age, he could neither read nor write, and he was in much mental distress because, as he thought, it was too late for him to begin. I assured him it was not too late, and urged him to begin at once, which he did, with so much energy that within a year from that time he was teaching school himself."

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

PROF. KEDZIE, of the State Agricultural College, has issued the following circular to Michigan land-owners:

So little is known to the public of the kind and quality of the soil in the northern counties of the Lower peninsula, that the tide of immigration is sweeping by Michigan to secure poorer lands farther from good markets. To help to publish to the world the undeveloped Agricultural resources of our State, I am gathering specimens of soil to be analyzed at this laboratory, and place in be exhibited at the State Fair in Detroit. It is my plan to arrange these specimens of soil in three glass jars, side by side. Into the first to reach me during the present month (May) will be placed one pound of soil from each county north of the line. I shall do this for the first two which shall send me duplicate, but only a specimen each shall Jar of dirt. It is very easy to collect soils which will be a surprise to many people, and will be of distinct, but such selection will be of very little value.

In sending the soil I want at least one bushel of surface soil, to be taken from a clean field, and marked so that I can identify the place from which it came. In person sending the soil to me please write me at the same time, stating the location from which the soil was taken, the kind of timber growing on such soil, and the time to which it has been cleared. Address, Prof. C. W. Kedzie, Agricultural College, Mich.

Specimens where there is an over-cultured soil, etc., I would suggest that the best way to take this soil is to take a couple of inches from the surface and then take the soil next to it to insure its analysis, for the fertility of the soil.

Persons wishing further information in regard to the value of collecting soil for the State Exhibitions may secure such information by writing to me.

Prof. Kedzie has had charge of the collection of the matter at once. I think something can be done to attract settlers to the State by the expenditure of our unimproved lands for agriculture purposes, and secure a share of the immigration which now passes by to other States.

JOSEPH S. BIRAMAN, a saloon-keeper at Battle Creek, fell off the bridge over Battle Creek, on the evening of the 23d and drowned before assistance could reach him.

THE indiscriminate slaughter of pigeons, young and old, in the region of Petoskey, has come to a halt. Five parties have been arrested and fined $50 and costs each for netting the birds out of season. The law against pigeon-netting, as forbidden by law. Not less than 400 Indians were also warned away from the nesting-grounds, and quite lively time when the redskins got into the impending law, and refused to travel. There have been at least 1,500 persons engaged in the business there this spring.

CALVIN MCDONALD has been held for trial, charged with perjury in swearing in his vote at the recent election that he was a citizen of Kent County, whereas he is not of age, it is claimed.

LIBAH BENSFIELD, seventy years old, manager of the Eagle Clothing House, at East Saginaw, committed suicide, on the evening of the 24th, for felonious assault upon the person of Annie Hackert, a six-year-old girl. He was committed for examination in default of $1,500.

THE residence of P. Shuttle, at East Saginaw, was burned, the other morning. Loss, $2,000.

The Garden and Cabin-Building Bird of Australia.

This bird selects for its hut and garden a spot on a level with the plain, having in its center a small shrub, with a trunk about the height and size of a small walking-stick. Around the base of this central support it constructs, of different mosses, a sort of cone, about a span in diameter. This cone of moss serves to strengthen the central pilaster, upon the top of which the whole edifice is sustained. The height of the cabin is at least half a meter. All around, from the top of the central pilaster and diverging outward therefrom, arranged methodically in an inclined position, are long stems, their upper ends supported on the apex of the pilaster, and their lower resting on the ground, and thus all around, excepting immediately in front. In this way is made the cabin, conical in form and quite regular in the shape the while presents when the work is completed. Many other stems are then added and interwoven in cyclonic form, so as to make a roof at once strong and impervious to the weather. Between the central pilaster and the insertion in the ground there is left a circular gallery in the shape of a horse-shoe. The whole structure has a total diameter of about a meter.

The long, straw-like stems of which it makes use as rafters, are the slender and upright branches of a species of orchid (Dendrobium), an epiphytal plant that grows in large tufts on the mossy branches of tall trees. These are gathered in the straw, and are about half a meter in length. These stems remain their small and closely packed leaves, which are still living, and continue to maintain their life a long while, as is the case with the greater part of the epiphytal orchids of the tropics and there's little doubt that these sagacious birds select this plant on account of this vitality, purposely, to prevent the decay of their dwelling.

But the esthetic tastes of our "gardeners" are not restricted to the construction of a cabin. Their fondness for flowers and for gardening is still more remarkable. Directly in front of the entrance to their cabin is a level place occupying a superficies about as large as that of the structure itself. It is a miniature meadow of soft moss, transported thither, kept smooth and clean, and from grass, weeds, stones and other objects not in harmony with its design. Upon this graceful green carpet are scattered flowers and fruit of brilliant colors, in such a manner that they really present the appearance of an elegant little garden. The moment any insignificant withered leaves appear to be accumulated near the entrance to the cabin. The variety of the objects that compose this garden is very great, and they are always of brilliant colors.—Dr. Thomas M. Brewer, in Scribner for May.

"EDWARD," said a mother to her son, a boy of eight, who was trundling a hoop in the front yard. "Edward, you mustn't go out at that gate into the street." "No, ma, I won't," was the reply. A few minutes afterward his mother saw him in the street manufacturing dirt pies. "Didn't I tell you," she said angrily, "not to go through the gate?" "Well, I didn't, mother," was the reply. "I climbed over the fence."

—The stories about Representative Leonard having met with foul play at Havana are not credited at the State Department. It is reported, however, as stated that he died of yellow fever, for the Consul General at Havana has written that this is the case and that he was during his illness tenderly nursed by members of the Consul's family.—N. Y. Evening Post.

"ECONOMY is the road to wealth." But as it is 298,000 miles long, and up hill all the way, it doesn't hold out much encouragement to a man who don't able to travel by rail.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

MY BREAD ON THE WATERS.

"Mister," the little fellow said,
"Please gimme a dime to buy some bread."

I turned to look at the ragged form,
Just in the midst of the Odeon storm,
Pinched, and haggard, and old with care,
In a cents pleading, was standing there.
"Twas a little boy not seven years old,
I'll admitted and in search for the "almighty gold,"
His eyes were red with weeping, I feel,
And down his cheeks there coiled a tear.
Even then.

His sisters story me dumb
'Twas a street in a city what city know,
Where an errand of duty led my feet,
That day, through the storm and blinding sleet.

"Poor little fellow!" at last I said,
"Have you no father?"

"Yes, sir," he said, with a sob, "he's dead!"
"No sir," he said, with a sob, "he's been Sick for a year, and the doctor said,
He'd never again get to work, and so,
We've suffered, poor! I asked, in pain,
As I looked upon his tattered dress,
"Haven't you mother?" he said, with a bitter groan
That would make a body a heart of stone,
"I've a mother!, we are all starving," he said,
We have a little baby sister dead,
In our mother, my father, my sister Kate—
Some jealous fellow

I did not wait
To ask him more. "Come with me," I stated,
You shall not hunger," and at my side
The poor little fellow closely clung,
And on our walk a sadness I sensed well,
But for the life of me I could not tell
Before the door of a baker's shop
And we entered.

"Now eat away, my boy,
Nothing added to nothing will not make a decent living."

"I am going to ask her to be my wife, and if she does me the honor to say 'Yes,' I will make a decent living out of my profession."

From the time forth John devoted himself with some ostentation to his supposed cousin's companion. He was determined to let the widow perceive that he had made his choice, and that he could not be bought with her money. Mr. Selden and Miss Marat were always together, and the widow did not interfere between her companion and her cousin. Perhaps she was rather glad of her close friendship, for the handsome Cleve made a much more delightful attendant. Thus the party fell quite naturally into couples, and the two weeks that the gentlemen had fixed as the limit of their stay lengthened into two months.

It was noticeable that as the ladies became more confidential with their lovers, they had less to say to each other: and it began at last to be quite evident to the real widow that the play must end for the present, or the denouement would come prematurely. Circumstances favored her determination. One night Clementine, with a rarefied face, came into her friend's room, and said:

"Fan, I have something to tell you. Cleve has asked me to marry him."

"Now, Clement, you have told him all; I know you have."

"Not a word, Fan. He still believes me the Widow Clare."

"Did you accept him?"

"Conditionally. I am to give him a final answer when we go to the city in October. You are going to New York this winter, are you not?"

"Yes. Our little play progresses finely. John Selden asked me to be his wife to-night."

"I told you men think and act in pairs."

"John is a noble fellow. I pretended to think his cousin had ill-used him, and he defended him until I was ashamed of myself; absolutely said, Clement, that you were a sufficient excuse for Mr. Clare's will. Then he blamed his own past idleness so much, and promised if I would only try and endure the slings and arrows of your outrageous temper, Clement, for two years longer, he would have made a home for me in which I could be happy. Yes, Clement, I should marry John Selden if he had not a five-dollar bill between us."

"I wish Cleve had been a little more explicit about his money affairs. However, there is time enough yet. When they leave to-morrow, what shall we do?"

"We will remain here another month; Levine will have the house ready for me by that time. I have written to him about refurnishing the parlors."

So next day the lovers parted, with many promises of constant letters and future happy days together. The interval was long and dull enough; but it passed, and one morning both gentlemen received notes of invitation to a small dinner-party at the Widow Clare's mansion in —— street. There was a good deal of dressing for this party. Cleve wished to make his entrance into his future home as became the prospective master of a million and a half of money, and John was desirous of not suffering in Clement's eyes by any comparison with the other gentlemen who would probably be there.

Scarcely had they entered the drawing-room when the ladies appeared, the true Widow Clare no longer in the unassuming toilet she had hitherto worn, but magnificent in white crepe lisse and satin, her arms and throat and pretty head flashing with sapphires and diamonds. Her companion had assumed now the role of simplicity, and Cleve was disappointed with the first glance at her plain white Chambery gauze dress.

John had seen nothing but the bright face of the girl he loved, and the love-light in her eyes. Before she could speak he had taken both her hands and kissed her. Dearest and best and loveliest Clement."

Her smile answered him first. Then she said, in a jocular tone, Mr. Selden, but we have been in somewhat too much unmask before real life begins. My name is not Clementine Marat, but Fanny Clare, Cousin John, I hope you are not disappointed."

Then she put her hand into John's, and they wandered off into the conservatory to finish their explanation.

Mr. Cleve Sullivan found himself at that moment in the most trying circumstance of his career. The real Clementine Marat stood looking down at a flower on the carpet, and evidently expecting him to resume the tender attitude he had been accustomed to bear toward her. He was a man of quick decisions where his own interests were concerned, and it did not take him half a minute to review his position and determine what to do. This plain blonde girl without fortune was not the girl he could marry, she had deceived him, too —he had a sudden and severe spasm of morality; his confidence was broken; he thought it was very poor sport to play with a man's most sacred feelings; he had been deeply disappointed and grossly ill-used, etc., etc.

Clementine stood perfectly still, with her eyes fixed on the carpet and her hands gently fluttering. Something must be done to break the awkward silence. She gave him no help and she made no defense, and it soon becomes embarrassing for a man to stand in the middle of a large drawing-room and talk to himself about any girl. Cleve felt it so.

"Have you done, sir?" at length she asked, lifting to his face a pair of blue eyes scintillating with scorn and anger. "I promised you my final answer to your suit when we met in New York. You have spared me that trouble. Good evening, sir."

Clementine showed to no one her disappointment, and she probably soon recovered from it. Her life was full of many other pleasant plans and hopes, and she could well afford to let a selfish lover pass out of it. She remained with her friend until after the marriage between her and John Selden had been consummated; and then Cleve sent her name among the list of passengers sailing on one particular day for Europe. As John and his bride left on the same steamer, Cleve supposed, of course, she had gone in their company.

Nine days thereafter Cleve Sullivan received a letter from Selden's wife's maid, or something or other! John always was a lucky fellow. Some fellows are always mulcuky in love affairs—I always am."

Half a year afterward he reiterated this sentiment with a great deal of unnecessary emphasis. He was just buttoning his gloves preparatory to starting for his afternoon's drive, when an old acquaintance hailed him.

"Oh, it's that fool Belmar," he muttered; "I shall have to offer him a ride. I thought he was in Paris. Hallo, Belmar, when did you get back? Have a ride?"

"No, thank you. I have promised my wife to ride with her this afternoon."

"Your wife! When were you married?"

"Last month, in Paris."

"And the happy lady was—"

"Why, I thought you knew; every one is talking about my good fortune, Mrs. Belmar is old Paul Marat's only child."

"What?"

"Miss Clementine Marat. She brings me nearly $9,000,000 in money and real estate, and a heart beyond all price."

"How on earth did you meet her?"

"She was traveling with Mr. and Mrs. Selden—you know John Selden. She has lived with Mrs. Selden ever since she left school; they were friends when they were girls together."

Cleve gathered up his reins, and nodding to Mr. Frank Belmar, drove at a flinable rate up the avenue and through the Park. He could not trust himself to speak to anyone, and when he did the remark which he made to himself in strict confidence was not flattering. For once Mr. Cleve Sullivan told Mr. Cleve Sullivan that he had been badly punished, and that he well deserved it.—Harper's Weekly.

The May-Pole in England.

Great were the doings in old time around the May-pole, for which the tallest tree was selected. It was drawn by as many as thirty or forty yoke of oxen, their horns decorated with flowers, followed by all the lads and lasses of the village. The pole was wound or painted with gay colors, and trimmed with garlands, bright handkerchiefs, and ribbon streamers from top to bottom.

With great ceremonies and shouts of joy it was lifted to its place by ropes and poulers, and set up firmly in the ground; and then the people joined hands and danced around it. The whole day was given up to merriment, every one dressing in holiday clothes, doors and windows were adorned with green boughs and flowers, the bells rang, processions of people in grotesque dresses were arranged, and the famous Morris dancers performed.

In this dance the people assumed certain characters. There was always Robin Hood, the great hero of the ries; Maid Marian, the Queen, with gilt crown on her head; Friar Tuck, a fool, with his fool's-cap and bells; and, above all, the hobby-horse. This animal was made of pasteboard, painted a sort of pink color, and propelled by a man inside, who made him perform various tricks not common to horses, such as threading a needle and holding a ladle in his mouth for pence.

The various characters labored to support their parts. The friar gave solemn advice, the Queen imitated ladylike manners, the fool joked and made sport, and the horse pranced in true horsey style.

This Morris dance is supposed to have been brought in early times from Spain, where the Moors danced it, and where it still survives as the "fandango."

In other places, wreaths were made on hoops, with a gayly dressed doll in the middle of each, and carried about by girls, the little owners singing a ballad which had been sung since the time of Queen Bess—and expecting a shower of pennies, of course.

At this May-day merriment came to an end when our grim Puritan fathers had power in England. Dancing around the May-pole looked to them like heathen adoration of an idol. Parliament made a law against it, and all the May-poles in the island were laid in the dust. The common people had their turn, when, a few years later, under a new King, the prohibitory law was repealed, and a new May-pole, the highest ever in England (134 feet), was set up in the Strand, London, with great pomp. But the English people were fast outgrowing the sport, and the customs have been dying out ever since. Now, a very few May-poles in obscure villages are all that can be found.—Olive Thorne, in St. Nicholas for May.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A Cincinnati man named Sullivan dropped dead from aneurism of the aorta, the result of exertion and excitement, while in the act of chastising his son.

—A Baltimore woman plucked a school-boy's arm, and he is threatened with death from osteosarcoma in consequence. His parents refused to have his arm amputated, as the surgeons advised.

—In Washington, recently, a weasel attacked a sleeping child of two years of age, making a deep gash in its throat, and would probably have killed it had not the child's screams aroused the parents.

—An Ithaca (N. Y.) man, named Manning, yawned his jaw out of joint, the other day, and held his dignity open for a couple of hours till his family physician could be summoned. The other doctors refused to come to his relief.

—While a negro man down in Georgia, the other day, was carrying a child in his arms along the road, a large eagle swept down upon them and endeavored to seize the child. A lively battle ensued between the parent and the eagle, the latter getting the better of it until a farmer came to the rescue, and knocked the eagle senseless with an ax. The bird was a monster, and as it has recovered, it is an object of considerable curiosity in the neighborhood.

—Joseph Wall, of Mansfield, Pa., a widower of fifty, with four children and property of the value of some $50,000, hanged himself a few days ago. A niece of his wife's, a woman of thirty, had been sent for by him to act as his housekeeper. She claimed that he had promised to marry her, and when he denied that he had any matrimonial intentions made preparations for suing him for breach of promise. The threatened suit and the fears of losing some of his fortune in consequence so weighed upon his mind that he was led to end his life by ingested miseries by suicide. He was a very close, economical man, and he dreaded more than anything else the thought of losing a dollar.

—The two mail carriers between Little Current and Sault Ste. Marie broke through the ice about ten miles east of Spanish River recently, and horses and dogs had a sharp struggle for life. The men, after getting out of the water, rescued their sustenance and proceeding the dogs, which were fastened by their harness to the toboggan on which the mail bags were carried, and was rapidly drowning them. Their efforts to save either dogs or mail would have been useless but for the sagacity of one dog, which, appearing to realize the difficulty, instead of wasting strength in trying to get upon the broken ice, secured the thongs by which they were bound to the toboggan by his teeth and deliberately gnawed them asunder. Both dogs, thus released, swam toward the men, who helped them out, and after considerable trouble they raised the toboggan and mail. They pushed on to Spanish River, where they spent nearly a whole day in drying the saturated mail bags. —Toronto Globe.

—A young couple came to this city the other day, and calling upon one of our most prominent magistrates, notified him of their wish to be joined in the bonds of holy wedlock. The expectant bride was a pretty and intelligent-looking girl of only eighteen summers, and the groom was a resolute-looking young fellow, who had but just arrived at legal age. The clergyman asked, as is customary, whether the to-be groom had procured a a license, and found that he not only had not, but that he had only a vague idea of what a license was. He was directed to the City Clerk for information, and meanwhile the happy couple sat in the parsonage parlors. However, the course of true love was not smoothly run. The visit to the City Clerk, for the young lady not being of age rendered a properly-certified permit from her parents necessary before the license could be granted. The young gentleman was not easily discouraged, for, making a hurried visit to the parsonage, and explaining matters, he hurried back to the depot, took the four o'clock train to Hartford, and, after arriving there, procured a carriage and drove some six or eight miles to the suburbs in which his prospective father and mother-in-law resided, got the permit, and came back here on the 7:30 train. EDITOR SENTINEL:

The death of John Morrissey, on Wednesday, seemed to occasion a good deal of genuine sorrow, both public and private. The newspapers all had words of regret in chronicling it, the city flags were placed at half mast, and the tone of individual comment was everywhere favorable to the deceased. The event itself was scarcely a surprise, the wonder being that human vitality could have been kept so long under a constant eating of incurable disease. Ever since the election last year, in which he squandered the remnant of his already reduced strength in his unsuccessful struggle to beat Augustus Schell, Mr. Morrissey has been practically doomed. That last struggle was in one respect like Sampson's in the temple. It pulled down the head pillars of Tammany and crushed his opponents, but it involved Morrissey's own life.

It is curious and interesting to see the various grades of moralizing over Morrissey in which the press have indulged, ranging from the "goody—goody" style, in which heresy of the prize-fighter predominates, up to a sort of apotheosis of the hard hitting Senator's "rugged virtues," as many delight to call them. The truth, as usual, lies somewhere between these extremes. The career of the dead man was quite out of usual order, and still he was by no means a remarkable character. He had a great deal of energy, and enough ability to raise above the obscurity in which he was born. I am afraid, however, that his muscle was practically the largest element in this ability. Had that not given him the sharp and general notoriety which attaches to the pugilist, it is questionable whether his later course would have attracted very much attention. His reannexation of the prize ring glorified him to the sentimentalists, so that his assumption of respectability was encouraged, and his political advancement bartered with utter disregard of the fact that this apparent reform sprung so little from quickened morality, that he immediately became a gambler and pool seller, and remained such to the end of his days. In politics his merits can be briefly summed up. He would not steal, and he stuck to his friends like General Grant himself. On the other hand, he was a thorough partisan; he never originated any valuable legislation, and he never rose in method or manner above the ward politician. He seemed to me a sort of human mastiff, full of force, courage, and fidelity, but with hardly more delicacy or true moral sense than the latter.

The telegraph has given us the opening ceremonies and scenes of the French Exhibition which is designed to leave all its predecessors behind in magnificence as well as time. The formal throwing open of the mammoth Fair by the Chief Executive of the French nation, assisted by three heirs apparent to the thrones of neighboring countries, and the ex sovereign of a fourth, is horribly described as having been most imposing. Of course no particulars of the exhibits have been received as yet, but the general tones of the messages, after making due allowance for the pardonable patriotic bias of our correspondents, gives satisfactory assurance that Uncle Sam, notwithstanding his tardy preparations, makes quite a satisfactory showing. The main exhibit from our shores that the telegraph has specified thus far, is the immense display of Howe scales, which, having swept the honors at every previous Exposition, have gone into this one more magnificently than ever. Their victory is a foregone conclusion, and I only wish I could say the same regarding all the rest of the American delegation.

It is an edifying spectacle to see the eager haste of a large class of small merchants, brokers, etc., to get into the friendly embrace of the bankrupt law before that convenient piece of legislation shall be wiped from the national statue book. The District Court here is kept busy from morning till night filing the papers of a shurring throng intent upon embracing what may be their last chance to get a coat of financial whitewash and be able hereafter to smile sweetly in the face of an array of swindled and wrathful but utterly hopless creditors. An absence of all incorrect was would doubtless work occasional hardship on honestly unfortunate men who, failing with no suspicion of trickery, would be unable to get a formal discharge, but it would put a stop to an enormous amount of rascality in the way of fraudulent bankruptcies. The action of Congress in the matter is awaited with much anxiety.

The Gilbert Elevated railroad, about which there has been, perhaps, more bitter fighting than about any previous enterprise in New York, is at last a fixed fact—a double-track road being completed to 59th street. A trial trip was made over it on Tuesday last, by its officers and invited guests, who rolled smoothly over its whole length amid a general waving of hats and handkerchiefs along the route. The road has become quite popular as it approached completion, and I believe the promotion of its original obstructionists is small who would now be glad to see it taken away. It will not be open to the public for some weeks to come.

General John C. Fremont, the almost successful opponent of Buchanan in the Presidential campaign of 1856, is generally supposed to be a very rich man. A dozen years ago he was rich, his property was currently estimated at something like a million. Within the last few years, however, his resources have been failing, until now, when he and his family have been reported to be in actual want. He is said to have sought employment in vain, and finally to have been obliged to accept the assistance of friends in getting some minor appointment by which he could earn a living. Such rumors are generally exaggerated, and this one probably forms no exception to the rule, but the undoubted fact of the poverty and difficulties of a man who, twenty years ago, came near to ruling the nation, and who a short time since was the possessor of wealth and high social position, is a prominent exemplification of the vicissitudes possible in the lives of humanity in general, and of Americans in particular.

Mr. James Gordon Bennett having vicariously explored Africa, is now going to quadrate—also by proxy—to the North Pole. As your readers may have heard, he has purchased a steam yacht especially for the purpose, and is now fitting it up for the rigorous journey. Old "Jack" Cole, Mr. Bennett's old and and well tried yachtsman, has just received orders by cable to go over to Europe immediately, to take charge of the new craft.

Apropos of the North Pole. An enterprising rural scientist has applied for permission to accompany a government expedition in that direction, for the purpose of demonstrating by personal experience a pet theory of his that the world is hollow and that interior, which is entirely habitable can be reached through openings at the polls. That's a nice theory, and its promulgation is especially opportune, for Canada is getting uncomfortably full of our absconding defaulters, who were beginning to look around uneasily for some other place where extradition papers cannot follow them. They will doubtless hail the discovery of a new and safe refuge.

The sudden and mysterious departure of Wm. H. Vanderbilt, for Europe, last week, is coupled with the fact of the recent sale of the Erie Railroad, and it is surmised as more than probable that he will assume control of the New Construction Company, which was last summer tendered him by the English bondholders. This would give him the entire management of the two great lines leading to New York, and would make him virtual dictator over many thousands of men and $275,000,000 of value.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crozier.

The Rev. John Russell has called his usual Prohibition State Convention to meet at Lansing June 12 to nominate a State ticket.

Lately four citizens of Grand Island were playing a game of poker—five cent "ante"—in a well known saloon of that place. A dispute arose as to the game, when one of the party made use of an expression about as follows: "I hope Christ will kill me if it isn't so." He had dealt the cards, and the betting on the hand was over, when he passed the pack to the next man to deal. The dealer shuffled the cards and handed them back to the man to cut them, at the same time giving him a light slap to attract his attention. The man did not move. He was found to be stone dead.—Omaha Bee.

Some of the Muskegon mills are already running night and day, and one cutting as much lumber as possible. The merchants expect a good season.

A Workingman's Quarter in London.

THERE are corners of London which spring and sunshine never touch; gloomy alleys and sunky lanes which, although perhaps decently clean, give the stranger the impression that they are squalid and unwholesome. Tired of the crush in Regent-street the other day, and of the crying colors in the motley toilets of the women shopping on the famous avenue, I turned aside to the right, and after five minutes' rapid walking, could have imagined myself 200 miles from the West End. I had entered upon a wilderness of narrow lanes, where the small, monumented houses were crowded together as by some patent squeezing process. Frowsy children frolicked and gamboled in the dirt, or ran with pitchers to the public house for beer. It was the dinner hour of the working class, and from mirth, south, east and west came long processions of imbecile operatives, nearly all young, dowdy and melancholy. The girls presented a sad spectacle. Their language was more than free. Whatever womanliness they may have at some remote period possessed had been swept away by association with rough men in the street, and in the squalid little houses in which they are doomed to live. There seemed to grace, no charm—not one atom of refinement in these shrieking lives. Smoke hung in clouds just above the roofs of the dwellings, and in some little passageway or dark angle where streets met there was a blackness as of night. The men and women living in these side streets have but one source of amusement, the "public house." This institution is represented as managed with a view to the prevention of sinuses, but it seems to me to be open just when it should be closed, and hermetically closed when it should be open. Sunday evening at six o'clock, if I take a walk through this sooty and smoky section, I shall see these operatives whom I have just described waiting in long lines to be let into the dingy compartments of the "public." There they will remain as long as their means will permit—men and women sitting together in the sickening atmosphere, and only arising to stumble home through a drizzling mist reeking filled with dampness. Perhaps, too, I shall come across a group of drunken women, fallen in the threshold of the "public," or dancing and shrieking as their sodden husbands endeavor to convey them home. It is an uncommon sight.

The district into which I strayed by accident must not be taken for a slum, or some lost and doomed section. It is merely a sample of scores on acres of homes in mighty London. It is guarded well, and one's purse and head are perfectly safe. On every third or fourth corner stands a policeman, tall, handsome, well-uniformed and obliging. But one looks in vain for the huge school-house, with its cheerful yard, which is to be found everywhere in Germany and America; in vain for some picturesque corner where a fountain, a cathedral and a massive portal inspire the soul with their beauties; in vain for some elegant home, which demonstrates that the workman has made progress and is happy. The shops are mean and shabby; a market place, although clean, has an uninviting air; the butcher boy scrubs the shelves with soap and water, but the meats and fish are so arranged that one revolts at the thought of partaking of them. Faded women in shabby gowns and plaited straw hats wander disconsolately about with baskets, chaffering, while unwashed children cling bawling to their skirts. Lodging houses with mysterious entrances announce therein bed and board on small signs, as if the proprietors were too modest to affront the public eye. The coffee-house is plunged in gloom. There are even little half curtains to exclude such light as might by chance have crept in, and the windows been ungarnished. Here and there is a little "foreign hotel," around whose doors dried and wizened old men in smelly coats hover with anxious air like sea gulls about a steamer. These are the drift of exile and of crime—refugees from a dozen climes—broken branches from the parent trees, strayed into the London whirlpool and carried round and round until it is time to go—down! Everyone in all this labyrinth of streets seems to have a little money to devote to one object, and that object is beer. The air is redolent of beer. Beer is the god of this locality. Its praises are set forth in flaming posters. And if there were a logo inviting anywhere in that vicinity I would wager that it is a brewery. On a damper and colder night than the usual foggy and chilly ones, the population indulges in "hot beer." With such wretched consolation do they eke out their sunless and miserable lives.

There is no other in any of the faces of the people in this section, unless it be the bloom bestowed by drink. A dull pallor is set upon the cheeks. Early death is written upon the foreheads of brows. But the most discouraging feature is the content which it is easy to discover on every visage. These people know no better existence, and they consequently care for none better. For those sentimental sympathies which they can be instructed and fascinated church is a vague formality, good enough for wealthy folk, but not worth much to the poor; the theater is a pleasure which they take greedily, when they are not too tired by their long day's work to go to it; but their main idea of enjoyment is the gratification of the grosser senses. And there seems no restraint upon them, the women are without safeguards, and consequences of their degradation; a large number of the men are brutal, thoughtless, indifferent. There is talent, perhaps genius, among these toiling folks; but one may readily fancy that it is stifled, stamped out by the hideous surroundings. At night there are schools, more too many, alas! and there is the "Royal Polytechnic," which these people might attend if they chose, but they cannot spare time from the theater and public house to attend more salvationgenious places.

The workman and workwoman are barely comfortable and nearly always look shabby, but their lot is paradise compared with that of hundreds in the section who are the slaves of poverty. That they live at all is a mystery; and how they live is quite past finding out. The last atom of their self-respect has long ago vanished, and they hug as readily as they spend the proceeds of their beggary for drink.

To emerge from such a section as this into a comparatively bright thoroughfare like Oxford street or Piccadilly is almost startling. The contrast is painful. If the Prince of Wales ever rebuilds London when he comes to the throne, he will do well to provide homes for the poor workman, to wrest them from the sloughs in which they have been so long that they begin to feel it natural to remain there. Two clever novelists, the authors of "The Golden Butterfly" and other attractive stories, are now publishing in Edmund Yates' paper a sparkling, satire called "The Monks of Thelema." It relates to the adventures of a country squire who indulged in very expensive series of social experiments for the civilizing and uplifting of his tenantry, and the utter failure of all his endeavors. This story represents the opinions of a large class which refuses to believe that the masses are susceptible of that culture and elevation which is not only desirable but almost necessary for the safety of the country.—London Cor. Boston Journal.

Deep Mining Shafts.

The Cheltur-Savage-Norcross shaft has reached a perpendicular depth of depth of 2,060 feet, and is now without doubt the deepest perpendicular shaft in America. It still backs, however, 340 feet of having reached as great a perpendicular depth below the surface as the Comstock, and is increased in solidated inclines. If continued downward until the west wall of the Combock lode is reached, it will have attained a depth of not far from 3,500 feet, and will then be one among the deepest—if not the deepest—perpendicular mining shafts in the world. Over a year ago the Adelbert shaft sunk on a silver-lead mine in Prizibram, Bohemia, had reached a perpendicular depth of 2,280 feet, and is, probably the deepest perpendicular shaft in the world. That is a very old mine, its workings dating back to the year 1500 or more. The attainment of that depth was celebrated at the time by the striking off of a large number of commemorative silver medals of the value of a florin each. There are other mines, however, where greater depths have been attained than at the Adelbert shaft, but not in a perpendicular line. One of these is in the coal mines of Vieux Remus, in Belgium, where, by sinking and then boring, a depth of 3,542 feet has been reached. Another is the Rock Salt Here hole, near Sperenberg, not far from Berlin, Prussia, which, a few years ago, had reached a perpendicular depth of 4,175 feet. The deepest bore hole in the world is probably the artesian spring at Potsdam, in Missouri, which has a depth of 5,580 feet.—Gold Hill (Nev.) News.

An Ex-Old Maid's Advice to Girls.

But such marriages as mine are not to be expected or even hoped for. It must be exceedingly rare for a woman of forty years old to meet a man whose age, taste, habits and position make their marriage a promise of happiness to both. Such a marriage is to be gratefully rejoiced over if it comes, but it is possible to be happy and useful without it. What I mean to impress on the girls, whom I write to them, is that they should make themselves able to stand alone. I'll quote Margaret Fuller's words on that subject to them: With self-support possible, unhappy years in the paternal home and many unhappy marriages will be prevented, a happy single life will be made possible, and a happy marriage will be more probable. Concise directions? If I gave any they would be like this:

1. Don't waste any time waiting for a him."

2. Don't spend quite as much as you earn.

3. To prevent narrowness, master some branch of knowledge not connected with your occupation.

4. To keep your heart warm, love somebody's children. If possible content yourself with their care or education.

5. When married women confide their troubles to you—and strange to say they will do it much oftener than they confide them to each other—don't let it give you a dark view of married life or of masculine human nature.—Golden Rule.

THE Batchelor Brothers have been missing gold fish from their tank for some time. A watch was set to catch the thieves, who were supposed to be boys. Yesterday the cat which belongs to the store was seen to approach the tank, and, watching its opportunity, quickly reached for and drew out one of the golden beauties and makes its dainty meal innocently. Pussy's claws will be cut and the tank covered.—Utica (N. Y.) Herald.

The average of misdirected letters sent up to this Department is over 350 a day; the day I was there last it ran up to about 1,000. The most difficult of these to get is Mr. Stone, who is called the "blind man," perhaps because he can decipher an inscription that is utterly illegible to any other man in America. His most difficult cases are the foreign letters. Here is a letter directed to "Sandtuk," which he makes out to be Sandy Hook. Sometimes the arrangement of the name and address is curious.

For Mr. Thomas
Smith Bridge
Post-office
Conn. America.

is very plain when you once understand that it is "For Mr. Thomas Smith, Bridgeport, Conn., America." But when a man says "Holo," how is anybody but a blind man to know that he means Ohio? One letter reads, "Bel Feet fine de Agne." Now the blind man knows that "Bue de Agua" is Spanish for Water street, and that there is a Water street in New Bedford, Mass. "Lysrun, Warner Co.," he translates into Lazarus, Warren Co., and "Common County, P., Ia." is made into Cameron County, Pa., But when he will guess that "Organ C. Ia Learey," in one line, means that it is to go to Auburn, in search of C. D. L.? The latter is directed as "Kunstanzer Brauerei, St. Louis Amerika." Mr. Stone recollects the fact that Constance's Brewery is at Stapleton, Staten Island, and the letter is sent there. He reads "loel" into Iowa, and "to Pella in Yumah" he makes to go to Pella, in the same State. One does flag him off with one miss. Here is one letter that wants to go to "Sia6 Hoh Zousouni, Strasse 9a"—that is, to the State of Ohio, Cincinnati, Street 9a. But that is not all. This other one wants to reach the same city, but it has a bad spell of another kind, for its address runs "Seltzmaty." And then "Plzr Barg Messessip," is sent to Vicksburg, Miss., which is spelled "muning." "Gilworks Berkshire" is sent to Pittsfield, in Berkshire County, Massachusetts, where there is a glass factory. But the most difficult one addressed to "John Hermann Schirmen," in one line, with the wonderful word "Stagus kamdo" for the rest. Mr. Stone cut the word in twain, and read it as "Chantanguo County," while he translated the whole into "John Hermann, Sherman P. O., Chautauqua County, N. Y."

But there are some which even a blind man cannot make out. One letter in "dinner" was in handwriting very vaguely addressed to

"Mackey, Esq., Americus."

Another reads:

"To much of this,
From your affectionate son,
"Andrew Jackson Stonewall."

In this case the close of the letter has been copied exactly by some one who did not understand the language. Instead of too much of this, there is really too little. But here is a case where the top of the letter has been imperfectly copied in the same fashion. It reads: "Insalay Evening, Nord America."

If Tuesday Evening should see this article, he will know that his letter has gone back again, and Edward Eggleston, in Scribner for May.

Poor, but Not Proud.

"I'm as poor as free-lunch, turtle-soup, but I don't glory in it," said a weak-eyed waif of humanity, with a breath like the odor of an old stocking, as he sat down on a bench among the parchs in Washington Park, the other morning.

"Merciful Moses!" exclaimed a space-haired mendicant, whose back hadn't earned a new coat for seven years, "show me the man as does, and be kin take my share, cheap."

"Trouble has followed me like a shadder from the cradle, an' there never was a time when I was any more free from misfortune than I am of gray backs at this minute, but I don't go round with a tin horn an' a banner, tellin' the world I'm poor, do I?"

The speaker looked around him and listened, with open mouths.

"I say I don't flaunt my poverty," he continued, "I'm not proud; it's not puffed up over it, like some folks is, an' I don't crow over them as is better off, nur make brags that I have more brains an' less to eat than any other living soul."

"Say, you do I," put in a man with a face that looked like a stranger to water. "I grins an' bears it."

"Job's turkey was a fat bird to the side of me, but what's the good of my puttin' on airs? It won't make manners grow on a station-house plank, will it? An' kin' boastin' about my misery put another load on my soup or give my stomach my more to do. Nary time. It can't. Conceit never put a full spoon in anybody's mouth, and knows I've got plenty of room if I wanted to brag, but that ain't my natur."

"Lots more of us can be hit with the same poke," chimed in a thin man with a tight belt.

"Yes, maybe; but if you'll hold your breath you'll say less," resumed the first speaker. "There was Lazarus, now; look at him. He was poor enough to be respectable, for long odds. But I discount him, boys, I do bowzy. He had sores that was intioin' to a full pack of dogs, but you couldn't find a sore leg enough for a pup to smell of before its eyes were open; an' then again, you can't prove he didn't own the hounds himself. Do I look slid to kick my own dog? Well, I should say not. Poverty, boys, is my best hold. It's the only thing in this world I ever had plenty of; but, as I said before, I don't flaunt it around and glory in it, nur I don't g'arn for any more of it. Poor? You couldn't find fat enough about me to grease a watch!"—Cincinnati Breakfast Table

The Queen of Tramps.

Mrs. Mary Merriman is a respectable appearing woman of thirty, is not bad looking, and has every appearance of being upright and of good character. She is, however, without doubt, the queen of female tramps, and can situate the great majority of male tramps. She is not a genuine tramp—not of the regular kind who are a terror to the country, and "work" cities and towns in a systematic manner, having their gates and door-post signs, etc., for of these she knows nothing, and with this class of people she does not associate, for they are no society to her, but she likes the business. She was born in St. Albans, in this State, and her folks were farmers. She has since lived in Hermon with her brother, Joseph Merriman, who does a good deal of trading in this city. Three years ago this fall she took it into her head to see the country, and started out with neither scrip nor staff, but a good pair of thick shoes. She walked across the country, leaving all kinds of weather, and finally brought up in Clinton, where she she took the back track and returned to this city. Two years ago she decided to start out again, and this time selected a longer tour. She walked through portions of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania, and on to Washington, where she remained a few days and "did the Capital," and from there to Cape Island, Delaware, where she remained a short time. Then on she went again, doing the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana, and finally got round to Kansas City, Mo. Here she stopped awhile and owned a new trampling outfit. Again she started, this time with the intention of crossing the plains to California, but finally stopped when told by many persons that it would be unsafe for her to think of attempting it alone. She then started on a return trip, walking from Kansas City to Chicago, thence to Detroit, doing Niagara Falls, and crossing to Canada, thence to New York and through Massachusetts, arriving at her home again after a little more than a week ago. She says she averages twenty-six miles a day, but always when good time is made out of clothes she finds no trouble in getting a few days' work, and in this manner enjoys her life.—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

Hearing and Smell in Insects.

All that I have observed leads me to believe that any sensitiveness shown by insects to sound is due to a diffused sensibility to vibration rather than to a differentiated sense like our own. If any one, an hour after his kitchen has been left in darkness and quiet, will enter it in as gentle a pendle, without shoes or light, and then, having no contact with anything, other than the unobtrusive air of his socks, shuffled feet with the floor, will speak suddenly and sharply, I believe he will find that not a cricket has ceased its signs of alarm. If, on the other hand, he should drop something heavy abruptly, or enter with his usual step in boots, there is a stampede; but even then nothing to compare with the commotion caused by the introduction of light.

As to smell, there can be no doubt, it seems to me, that it is a very finely differentiated sense; residing, I suspect, to a great extent, in the antennæ, and probably capable of detecting qualities in substances of which our own analogous sense gives us no warning. The fulmenton affords an example in point. One of the larger of these sighted inside my open window in the sunshine this afternoon, and I noticed, as often before, the incessant play of his antennæ as he hunted restlessly to and fro, apparently in search of leaves, or paper, concealed under the wood within his horn as a banner, tellin' the world I'm poor, do I?"

The crowd looked around him and listened, with open mouths.

"I say I don't flaunt my poverty," he continued. "I'm not proud; it's not puffed up over it, like some folks is, an' I don't crow over them as is better off, nur make brags that I have more brains an' less to eat than any other living soul."

"Say, you do I," put in a man with a face that looked like a stranger to water. "I grins an' bears it."

"Job's turkey was a fat bird to the side of me, but what's the good of my puttin' on airs? It won't make manners grow on a station-house plank, will it? An' kin' boastin' about my misery put another load on my soup or give my stomach my more to do. Nary time. It can't. Conceit never put a full spoon in anybody's mouth, and knows I've got plenty of room if I wanted to brag, but that ain't my natur."

"Lots more of us can be hit with the same poke," chimed in a thin man with a tight belt.

"Yes, maybe; but if you'll hold your breath you'll say less," resumed the first speaker. "There was Lazarus, now; look at him. He was poor enough to be respectable, for long odds. But I discount him, boys, I do bowzy. He had sores that was intioin' to a full pack of dogs, but you couldn't find a sore leg enough for a pup to smell of before its eyes were open; an' then again, you can't prove he didn't own the hounds himself. Do I look slid to kick my own dog? Well, I should say not. Poverty, boys, is my best hold. It's the only thing in this world I ever had plenty of; but, as I said before, I

Washington Celebrities on the Road.

Nowhere in the world are there better pavements for driving within the city limits, and in the country round about are some delightful drives, which are well patronized on pleasant days, and one may meet in the hour between the close of business and dark nearly all the notables of official and social Washington.

President Hayes and his wife are seldom prevented from taking their daily drive between four and seven o'clock, and only in the most stormy weather are they massed from the boulevard. The President's horses were a matter of much concern during the first few months of his administration. Rogers bought them of a livery-stable keeper in Alexandria, and, as is usual, was imposed upon. They were ill-matched, and were a disgrace to the Nation—a hundred hacks in Washington were drawn by better pairs. Lest fall, however, after suffering much ridicule, the President authorized the purchase of another pair, and an educated horseman procured them for him in Kentucky. They are handsome, well-matched, easy-traveling grays.

President Hayes, as almost everybody knows, used to drive a four-in-hand, before a dog-cart, and it was a familiar thing to see Lucy sitting on the box, with his habitual cigar, driving them into the country. Grant was equally fond of exercising his numerous kinsmen. He drove for the pleasure of it and not for show, and was never found on the fashionable streets with his four-in-hand. He was also too tall in a coach until he came to the well-traveled country road. Grant's skill as a horseman is undoubted, and he was an accomplished driver to manage his team.

Senator Conkling drives a fine, large black horse, which he calls "Douglass." Every night, about 5 o'clock, Brewster buggy, and generally alone. When the Senate adjourns, "Douglass" is generally waiting for his master at the east front of the Capitol, and takes a stretch of six or eight miles before dinner.

Senator Burnside drives a handsome pair of bays, large and fast, to a sort of Irish jaunting-car, and is fond of having a couple of ladies with him.

Senator Cameron has quite a stud of horses and good taste in matters of equipage. His favorite "outfit" is a pair of coach grays that he has, and his daughter by his side. Miss Cameron is an accomplished horsewoman, as is Mrs Hayard also.

The Russian Minister has a mammouth pair of bays, with a great, lumbering carriage that is the envy of the costs-of-arms of his own and his wife's family. He and Mme. Shiskin are very estimable, unassuming people, and put on less style than any of the other foreigners. They are to be seen walking every day, plainly dressed, and son stops to kiss little children that she meets in the streets. Having kissed them, she runs after her husband and jabbers Russian at him till he smiles and pats her head, lovingly as she has kissed. They have a family of little ones of their own, and for their use the carriage is mostly devoted.

Minister Maid's elaborate stylish turn-outs, and, during Lent especially, are on the drives every pleasant day. Sir Edward Thornton has a handsome pair of clipped cleolants, which he drives before an elegant barouche, but he generally prefers walking himself, and is one of the most luxuriously pedestrians in Washington. His walking-shoes are a curiosity. The soles are broad and bevelled in the English style, and are fully half an inch thick. The uppers are of goat-skin, tied with leather thongs.

Secy Sherman takes his daily drive in an open carriage, drawn by two ordinary-looking horses. Every day about four o'clock, if it isn't too stormy, you can see Mrs. Sherman waiting for her husband, at one of the entrances to the Treasury Department, and as he is very methodical, his appearance at the door every day is as regular as the clock strikes four.

Corcoran, the banker and philanthropist, drives a pair of small, jogging bays before a comfortable carriage, which he enters by the ground, which was made at his order because his rheumatic limbs refuse to enter a high carriage. Senator Morton's old cronies in the Senate, and many absent ones, who visit Washington it could be seen stinding either at the Ebbitt House, or at the White House, or the Capitol, or some one of the Departments, and it carried him faithfully for many years. It was how, the box reaching down to within a foot or so of the curbstone, and was made expressly for him. It was scratched and battered and worn, and the horses he drove before it was one of the foriournest specimens of animal life that was ever seen. The harness was old and rusty, and the repairs it had undergone were well advertised. Mr. Morton had a peculiar antipathy for anything pretentious—it was almost a disease with him, as it was with Lincoln—and no one could ever induce him to get his coups varnished or trade his old crock-bait-off for a horse. One day his driver left him and he engaged a new one. The first time the new man made his appearance he was a wore a new coat and brought from his former service, but Mr. Morton would not enter the carriage until the driver had taken off the rosette from his hat and put on a suit of ordinary clothes. He used to say that livery was a badge of servitude. Fernando Wood drives a mammoth pair of bay horses, with a gold-mounted harness covered all over with his monogram. His carriage is a lumbering evidence of respectability.—Washington Cor. Buffalo Commercial.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—In the spring and summer cultivate your farms—in the winter cultivate yourself.—Ibid.

—It is intelligent labor which enables us to make the most of our resources.—Iowa State Register.

—Cream Pie—One pint sweet cream, the whites of two eggs, well beaten; sweeten to the taste with pulverized sugar. One crust —Custard Pudding—One quart of sweet milk, three eggs and two-thirds of a cupful of sugar; grate nutmeg on top. Bake slowly till solid.

—Macaroons—One and one-quarter pounds powdered sugar, one pound sweet almonds, blanched and pounded to a paste, whites of six eggs, grated peel of two lemons.

The farmers most likely to pay too much for farm hands are those who pay the least to cheap, inferior hands. These are the only class who receive too much pay.—Iowa Register.

—Onion Soup.—Cut into pieces twelve onions; boil them in three quarts of milk and water, equally mixed; add a little veal; season with butter and pepper; add a few well-toasted slices of white bread and a handful of finely chopped parsley.

—There is no difficulty in having a flower garden in a few minutes each day will keep it in order, if not too large; and even a few square feet of land planted with a good selection of flowers, all of which can be secured at trifling cost, will give flowers every day from early spring until late autumn, and will also be a constant source of pleasure.

—Tinned Ware.—And now the Scientific American warns the public against tinned ware, the use of which in manufacture nowadays being largely adulterated with lead, in consequence of which the "tinned" ware loses its original brightness, whilst the lead lurks round in the systems of those who use it, biding its time for the work of Death.

—Parsnip Fritters.—Many consider this the best way of cooking parsnips. Boil tender and mash very smooth; removing carefully the strings or woody portions. For three or four parsnips allow two beaten eggs, three tablespoonfuls of cream, one tablespoonful of melted butter and a teaspoonful of salt. Stir in a very little flour, and fry either as fritters or griddle cakes.

—Lemon Toast.—Take the yelks of six eggs, beat well, add half pint cup of sweet milk; take bread, not too stale, and cut into slices; dip them into the milk and eggs, and fry in butter to a delicate brown; take the whites of the six eggs and beat to a froth, add a large cup white sugar and two cups boiling water and the juice of two lemons; serve over the toast as a sauce and you will have a delicious supper dish.

—Baked Indian Pudding.—Two quarts of milk, scalded, one cup meal, one-half cup of flour; meal and flour wet with a very little cold milk, then turn into the scalded milk; when cool add two eggs, one and one-half cups of sugar, one-half cup of molasses, one nutmeg, a little salt and one and one-half teaspoonfuls of ginger. Rub a piece of butter as large as half an egg around the pan before putting in the ingredients, and bake an hour.—Household.

Melons.

We have received one or two communications from correspondents about watermelons. There are various modes by which growers have succeeded in raising large and delicious melons. Take a hill of barn-yard manure, mixed with a southern exposure is preferable. One mistake with many is in trying to raise them in ground which is allowed to get foul after the vines begin to run. To insure success, let the ground be kept clear.

We will name the different modes: Break up the ground deep; harrow, check from ten to twelve feet apart. Have little or no hill; leave the hill concave. Six or eight inches from the hill put stubbs manure two and a half inches thick. Cultivate well; plant good seed, have no squashes, pumpkins or gourds near. Clip the ends of the vines if you wish large melons.

Another plan: Plow and harrow and mark out eight feet each way. Then dig a hole on each square about eight or ten inches deep and five feet across. Sow fill up with rotten manure, pack it slightly with your foot and spread about one inch of good soil over the top; then drop your seeds and cover them one inch. Hog manure is a good fertilizer for melons. Work them well; thin out to three in a hill. This plan will raise fine melons.

Another: Plow your ground deeply and lay it off ten feet apart each way; digging holes two by two feet apart and one foot deep. Take good barn-yard manure and fill up to within three inches of the top, covering this manure with soil, so that the hill will be a little above the general level. Plant from eight to ten seeds in a hill. When up, thin to two plants and cultivate light. If bugs trouble the vines, dissolve gum camphor in water and sprinkle the plants for a few days.

Another plan is to prepare the ground as above, using chip manure, mixed with leached ashes and lien manure. After the plants are up, use a cultivator or double shovel. As the vines grow, draw surface earth to the plants—never draw the earth from the vines, but replace with fresh dirt. Keep the ground clean with a hoe after the vines begin to run.

One more plan: Plow the ground deep, harrow it and have the surface soil in fine condition. The distances to plant should be regulated by the variety, some requiring more space than others. Let your hills be, say, rather flat, not more than two inches. After the plants come up, give clean culture, keeping the ground loose and level.—N. Y. Herald.

Expense of Farm Teams.

In no part of the country is this expense of keeping animals to do farm work as great as in the West. This is largely owing to the fact that Western farmers have continued, in one way and another, to make animals do the work that men perform elsewhere. Grass is cut, hay is spread, raked and plucked by horse power. Grain is sowed, harvested and threshed by the same means. Corn is planted, cultivated and, in some instances, cut up, husked and shelled by machines operated by horse power. Even potatoes are now cut, dropped, covered, cultivated and harvested by horse power. Of late, Western farmers have stopped raising most of the crops that require hand cultivation. The only objection to raising flax, broom-corn, tobacco and castor-beans is that they require too much manual labor.

The second reason why it costs more to keep a farm team here than in most parts of the country is, that farmers keep more expensive animals. An expensive team always calls for expensive food, harness and buildings for shelter. In the East, one rarely finds a good farm work. They require to be shod but once a year. A wooden yoke, which will last a century and only cost a dollar or two, takes the place of an expensive harness. The food of the oxen is grass in summer and hay and straw in winter. At the end of a dozen years they are converted into beef. They are never of much expense to their owner. In the South, the mule is used on the farm almost exclusively. The mule is more hardy than the horse; can be kept for about half as much; will work for a greater number of years, and will get along with poor quarters and a very simple harness.

Most Western farmers will tolerate inferior teams because they must have them. They must have horses; generally they insist on having fine horses, that will take them to town in good time and make a fine appearance on the road. Horses of this sort must be fed grain the entire year. They must receive extra care and are obliged to have good stables and harness. It is likely that it will be long before the fashion of keeping horses for doing farm work changes in the West, although oxen, mules and more oxen and mules could be used to advantage. Most Southern farmers would say at once that they could make nothing from their estates if they were obliged to work them with horses, regarding a single pair of mules, and as well as a goodly allowance of oats and other grain. The same opinions would be expressed by the farmers in the New England States, who use one oxen for field work.—Chicago Times.

WHY IS IT

The truths of science and progressive thought have always been unpopular at first—then the jackass's grin—prejudice and disbelief, or remain forever unknown. Why is it that people are so slow to investigate facts relative directly to the phenomena of their own existence? Autosuggestion, Spontaneous change of a star, assign it a place at once, and it is forever fixed in the sky which a mathematical problem is easier solved because forever an axiom; but no matter how clearly the principles which govern the health sickness do demonstrated, some refuse to believe. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which are now so generally used, and deservedly popular, were, in their early days, very strenuously opposed by the people. Today, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has outstripped the old-time sarsaparillas, his pellets are in great use in place of the coarse, huge, drastic pills formerly so much employed by the faculty. Of late, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and his Favorite Prescription are enormous. Where the skin is sallow and covered with blotches and pimples, or where there are scrofulous swellings and affections, a few bottles of his Golden Medical Discovery will effect an entire cure. If you feel dull, drowsy, confined, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish-brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills alternated with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and tongue coated as if you are suffering from Torpid Liver, or "Biliousness" in many cases of "Liver Complaint" only part of these symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal, as it effects perfect cures, leaving the liver strengthened and healthy. Debilitated females who have undergone all the tortures of caustic and the knife, and yet suffer with those peculiar dragging-down sensations and weaknesses, can have guaranteed to them prompt and positive relief by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a wide-range palliative and torpid liver, or "biliousness," are promptly relieved by the Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Sold by all druggists.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR
At this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the sudden change of its liver to discharge the excess of bile. If neither is not assisted in its efforts, serious illness, or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy, SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

Simmons' Liver Regulator has been in use for half a century and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time, according to the directions. It is without doubt the greatest blood purifier in the world; it is perfectly harmless, being carefully compounded from rare roots and herbs, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance. It takes the place of quinine and arsenic in fever and ague districts, and even the doctors there have heretofore been extensively used. For sores, boils or any other troubles arising from impure blood, there is a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION!
As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no bottles of Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, unless in our engraved wrapper, with Trade Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. Take no other. Manufactured only by HOMESTEAD settlers who have heard the frequent claims that the Democratic party is the friend of the poor man, will appreciate one phase of Congressional economy. Through the action of the Democrats in the House the force in the Land Office has been cut down until the correspondence is nine months behind, and the patenting of public lands three years behind.

PERSONAL.—E. A. H. Cole, of South Arm, was a passenger on the Fountain City, Thursday, from Chicago.

—Richard Knight and wife took the propeller Empire State, at this place, on Friday, for Wisconsin, where they will remain some time visiting friends.

WANTED—Highest market price will be paid for one hundred bushels of buckwheat at Fox, Rose & Buttars.

The prop Fountain City arrived from Buffalo yesterday with a few passengers and about 400 tons of general merchandise. Capt. Gibson reports foggy and squally weather most all the way up. Among the passengers are Willard A. Smith, Esq., editor and publisher of the Charlevoix (Mich.) Sentinel a sprighty five column quarto, now in its tenth year. His wife accompanies him. The Fountain City will leave for Buffalo again to-morrow evening.—Chicago Tribune 14th.

—The propeller Oneida wooded here Sunday.

—Several schooners Little Georgie, Rapid Gish, Lee Higby, scows Prince and Owen. Now in port, schooner Redbird.

—The steamer Gazelle is expected here hourly.

THE BRIDGE.—The pier and turntable to the new iron bridge for this place arrived yesterday by steamer Van Raalte. Four men accompany it, and work will immediately be commenced in putting it in place. The balance of the iron will arrive next Monday.

DON'T be shy means think that the Republican party is dead. It is, in fact, well, and a little more than convalescent, and will fight a strong battle next fall, and a stronger one in 1880. Let the Republicans of Charlevoix county do their full share in restoring the party to its old strength and prestige.

U. S. to Franklin B. Shaw, 80 acres in South Arm.

U. S. to Isaac Purkey, 40 acres in Melrose.

It is a good time to buy your wife, daughter, sister, mother or some body else a shawl. Carpenter & Bartholomew have a nice assortment.

THE FROST.—Again we are emphatically reminded of the superiority of our climate over that of even more southern latitudes. On the nights of the 11th, 12th and 13th heavy frost visited the southern and western portion of this State, killing down wheat, grapes, apples, peaches, strawberries, potatoes and garden stuff. Throughout the entire southern portion of the State, as far north as Grand Rapids, the farmers' prospects have been fearfully blighted. In Grand Traverse we hear of no serious damage having been done, and in this vicinity no traces of frost are noticeable as far as we have learned.

Kid gloves only 50cts, fine stock of neck ruching, ladies' silk ties in new styles, toilet soaps, silver money purses, and any quantity of new novelties in fancy goods and notions, just received at our store. Fox, Rose & Buttars.

AN ENJOYABLE TRIP.—Ourself, wife and son took the propeller Fountain City, at this port, on Friday, the 10th. We arrived in the great city on Sunday noon, and remained until the following Tuesday evening. During that time we penetrated the dense wilderness of Chicago, went among its palaces and among its hovels, were elbowed by the millionaire and by the beggar. We saw the aristocrat alight from his carriage and ascend the marble steps of his $400,000 residence, and a brief walk brought us where squalor, poverty, filth and wretchedness unite in presenting the other extreme. From a quiet village like Charlevoix to the busy streets of the third city in the Union is a transition which almost takes one's breath, but for two days we wandered among the towering blocks, dodging street cars and omnibusses, and interrogating policemen, gazing upon the architectural wonders of the great city — the Palmer House, the Grand Pacific, the new Postoffice, the Chamber of Commerce, and scores of other magnificent structures. From the roof of an elevator we obtained a birdseye view of Chicago, and far out upon the prairies beyond. The Water Works, Lincoln Park, McVicker's Theater, and many other places of interest were visited, and we returned at last to our steamer glutted with sight seeing, and longing for the quiet of our own little village. Our trip was rendered doubly enjoyable because we took passage in the Fountain City. Capt. Gibson, with the able assistance of his Steward, Mr. Dickson, make the steamer a perfect home for her passengers. We never heard of a person who failed to enjoy himself on this steamer if nothing more than seasickness intervened to prevent.

Hon. Jay A. Hubbell, of the 9th District receives the following well merited compliment from the Detroit Post & Tribune. "Mr. Hubbell's constituents have shown a disposition to trust their interests in his hands while faithfully serving them, and they have found their advantage in it. He has also proved honest, faithful and competent, and they show their appreciation of his services in their behalf and their confidence in his continued fidelity by retaining him as their agent, rather than to try the doubtful experiment of employing an unskilled workman in his place."

Carpenter & Bartholomew have a good assortment of every thing at a way down price.

Hon. J. A. Hubbell is being endorsed for a renomination by many papers in the southern part of the district. If they represent the power that sends delegates to the congressional conventions and he is backed by a solid Lake Superior support as before, his renomination is assured.—Cadillac News.

ANOTHER FOUND.—A small boat from Milwaukee came lately with another pound net, which the owners propose to set just south of the point north of this place. We call the attention of the Township authorities to Section 8 of the Compiled Laws of 1871, page 674, which provides that a license of $50 shall be paid by any non resident who sets a pound net on any coast of the Township.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

THE bill to repeal the Bankrupt law was laid before the Senate on the 30th ult., with the amendments agreed to by the House, and considerable discussion was developed by the unprecedented reveal of the law, and a motion to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee for immediate report on the 29th of September. The report on the several propositions to amend was unanimously concurred in. Several bills were introduced relative to and pleading on the subscription to the House the Legislative Appropriation bill. A further resolution of thanksgiving for the harvest and an amendment was rejected—7 to 36—recognizing the state of the Republic, and appropriating $80,000 for its maintenance.

IN the Senate, on the 1st, discussion was had on the resolution submitted by Mr. Blaine declaring that any radical change in the tariff at this time would be inopportune. The bill to amend the Bankrupt law was then taken up, and the House amendment providing that the repeal of the law should not affect any actions or criminal proceedings arising under it prior to repeal, was adopted as a proviso that the repeal should not affect the rights and proceedings growing out of proceedings had in bankruptcy, including all rights of debtors and creditors and assignees, and that all acts and proceedings under any order or decree made in any case in bankruptcy prior to the repeal, and that the repeal should take effect Jan. 1 1878. A motion was agreed to for referring the bill as amended to the Judiciary Committee. In the House a report was received from the Committee on Public Lands. The House bill to repeal the Bankrupt Law was called up, and Messrs. Perry and Voorhees spoke in favor. Pending the debate the House adjourned.

IN the Senate, on the 2d, Mr. Thurman, from the Judiciary Committee, reported back the bill to repeal the Bankrupt law, with an amendment providing that the repeal of the law should not affect the pending proceedings in bankruptcy, and declaring that the repeal shall take effect Jan. 1 1878. The bill was made the special order for Monday next. Bills were introduced and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The House bill to repeal the Bankrupt Law was called up, and Messrs. Perry and Voorhees spoke in favor. Pending the debate the House adjourned.

IN the House, several bills were reported from committees, which were then disposed of, including the Inter-State Sewerage bill to regulate interstate commerce and prohibit unjust discrimination by common carriers. Several proposed amendments to the Constitution were also introduced and referred.

SENATE not in session on the 3d.

A bill was introduced and referred in the House to encourage shipping. The Legislative Appropriation bill was further amended in Committee of the Whole and reported to the House, but no further action was taken thereon. Among the amendments agreed to in Committee were those increasing the compensation of the clerks and messengers of the Agricultural Department to the amount allowed by law.

SENATE not in session on the 4th.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

NEW YORK, May 17, 1878

EDITOR SENTINEL:

New York is just at present in what might be called "a state of mind." The cause of this sad recollection of things is smells—smells infamous, smells penetrating, smells numerous and various. What makes it worse is the fact that it is not the lower, pickets, business portion of the island that is afflicted, but the great known some distance lying north of Madison square, and generally known as Murray Hill. Just think of it! Murray Hill smells badly! Shades of sybaris and Cyprus! Can you imagine it? Murray Hill that wears them and diamonds, that can digest an entire dinner from cockatoos to spiders' nukes on toast, and to whose delicate senses the perfume of the weed violet is vulgarly strong and oppressive! Why, no such low word as smell would be allowed in its vocabulary. And yet there stands the grievous fact that at this writing this sanctum sanctorum of fashion and refinement is for the most part wrapped in the loathsome embrace of a horrible stench. Is it any wonder that New York is on its hind legs at such an unheard of, such an unpossible outrage?

The immediate cause of this sudden invasion of Gotham's most aristocratic olfactories is a cluster of rendering establishment and glue factories down by the East River, and the prime source is a lazy and inefficient Board of Health that leaves these nuisances. Entirely this august body of two members has totally ignored the many individual protests which have been raised against the constantly growing infection, but now the press and the Grand Jury having taken the matter up in a spirit which leaves no shadow of their intention to bring about a reform, the haughty "Board of Disease," as it is called, is coming down from its lofty height and making various hurried promises of better conduct. If they want to save their bacon they will have to show themselves in earnest at once, for when our Murray Hill is stopped on we are a dangerous lot.

Whether the large amount of editorial attention which has been bestowed on the excursion of the Coaching Club to Philadelphia on Saturday is the result of a genuine and wondering admiration for this not very exciting performance, or of such a scarcity of important news as causes the unfortunate fraternity whose endless task it is to fill so many columns a day to catch wildly at every straw of interest that floats with the sluggish current, is an open question. The simple fact is, that a private Club, in search of amusement, got up a sort of picnic to Philadelphia, and by way of novelty drove over in a coach, preferring, for some unknown reason, this slow and laborious method to the quicker and easier mode proved by the railroad. Immediately the metropolitan press breaks out all over with columns of description, high sounding editorials, and elaborate maps of the route, and the illustrated papers fill themselves with soul-stirring engravings of the coach "as it appeared" under all manner of circumstances.

My own experience in coaching being mostly confined to travel in a Broadway stage, it may be that I do not fully understand the charm of the thing, as practiced by Delancy Kane and his followers; but things being as they are, I strongly incline to think that a ride in a Pullman car in preference to the cramped jolting of an obsolete conveyance having for its sole recommendation the temporary patronage of a blanc bon ton.

How rich men's fortunes shrink and dwindle when their estates are settled. Before W. S. O'Brien, of Bonanza fame, died, rumor made of him a next of Monte Cristo, and talked freely of twenty or twenty-five millions as his money value. His executors think his property may realize four or five millions. Then there was John Morrissey who was popularly supposed to roll in illgotten wealth.—Those in charge of his affairs now say they will be lucky if they can pay his debts and two small bequests which he made to his sisters in his will.

On the other hand there is occasionally, though very rarely, an instance wherein current report falls to do justice to the amount of a man's possessions.—Mr. Charles Morgan, who died here a few years ago, was a man whose name was not on the papers, and who was known by name only to comparatively few, but who came to have been put in print to Vanderbilt in the extent of his ownership of railroad and steamship property. He leaves his family some $12,000,000.

It is probable that opposition to the Brooklyn Bridge, like that which fought the construction of every foot of the elevated railways, will cease only with the completion of the work. An obstructing effort has been commenced to have the work stopped and the million of money already sunk abandoned, on the old ground that it will interfere with the passage of tall masted vessels. Luckily the great enterprise is too far advanced to be more than delayed and annoyed by these never ceiling attacks. The greatest good of the greatest number must positively prevail.

This being the regular season for the anniversaries of the various and other denominational institutions, the American Bible Society has just held its sixty-second annual meeting, at which some interesting figures were given regarding its work. During the past year it has distributed nearly 950,000 Bibles in this and foreign countries, and during its whole existence, has printed and circulated the enormous number of thirty four million eight hundred thousand copies of the sacred volume.

RADIX

The report of special agent Brooks in reference to the Indian homesteads of the Ottawas and Chippewas, in Michigan, has been referred to at length in the Washington correspondence of the Post & Tribune. This report is made the basis of a recent letter from Commissioner of the Land Office to the Secretary of the Interior. The commissioner coincides with the agent in the belief that in many cases the proceedings by which the Indians were deprived of their homesteads were not regular, and presents the following full to remedy defects in the existing law and to right any wrongs that may have been inflicted upon the Indians in the past.

Be it enacted, That all homestead entries under the act of Congress of June 10, 1872, March 3, 1875, and March 30, 1876, within the limits of the reservation made pursuant to the treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan, which the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find to have been made in good faith by the class of Ottawas and Chippewa Indians who had not made selections or purchases under said treaty, including such as were minors at the expiration of the period during which selections and purchases were allowed to be made thereunder, where no adverse claim of prior inception exists, and the tract does not exceed the legal maximum in quantity, shall be confirmed, and patents shall be issued therefor to such Indians, all restrictions, provisions, or requirements of the homestead laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. That when applications have been made by any Indians of the class hereinbefore mentioned for homestead entries under said acts, and the application refused by the district land officers, for any reason which the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall find to be legally sufficient the Indians by whom the applications were made shall be entitled to the benefits of the foregoing section on their entries being made in like manner as if made before the passage of this act: Provided, That where the land so applied for has subsequently been disposed of to an applicant in good faith, under any of the land laws of the United States, other land may be entered by such Indian, and, upon such entry being made, the confirmation shall extend thereto in like manner as hereinbefore provided.

Provided, That where such homestead entries have been canceled for any reason whatever, and the lands embraced therein have been subsequently entered under the homestead laws of the United States by parties innocent of fraud in procuring such cancellation, such Indians shall have the right to make entry elsewhere, and shall thereupon be entitled to patents for the lands so entered in lieu of the original tracts.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the Imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has become successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequaled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A young man in Marietta, Md. was poisoned by his sweetheart, but he recovered, and now insists that the marriage engagement shall not be broken.

—Mrs. Caroline Shockley, of Staten Island, refused to take an oath on Good Friday, through conscientious scruples, hence the woman who had stolen Mrs. Shockley's clothes was discharged.

—A man in Sacramento the other day bought a suit of new clothes, and threw away his old ones. After a while he remembered that he had left $110 in his old clothes, and went to find them, but was too late.

—Twenty-six years ago a man went from Williamsburg, Mass., to California, leaving $700 as a loan to a farmer, in whom he put more trust than in savings banks. He wrote letters about the money from time to time, and supposed it was safely drawing interest. Recently he came across the continent to collect it, the sum of principal and interest amounting to $3,000; but the farmer, who is wealthy, refused to pay a cent, on the ground that the note was outlawed. The man had to borrow money with which to get back to California.

—The day last week, four citizens of Grand Island were playing a game of poker—five-cent "ante"—in a well-known saloon of that place. A disputed stone as to game, when one of the parties made use of an expression about as follows: "I hope Christ will kill me if I don't so." He had dealt the cards, and the betting on the hands was over, when he passed the puck to the next man, who left the room. The dealer shuffled the cards and handed them back to the man to cut them, at the same time giving him a light slap to attract his attention. The man did not move. He was found to be stone dead. —Omaha Bee.

—A frightful accident, by which a man named Moritz Koch lost his life, occurred recently near Collinsville, Ill. Koch was engaged in sinking an mine shaft for the miners, and, having nearly reached the coal "entry," about 163 feet below the surface, he put in an unusually heavy blast of powder, thinking to complete the connection with the entry. Having set the fuse, he was hauled to the top, and soon after the powder exploded. Against the protest of his friends he immediately had himself lowered, but before reaching the bottom gave the signal for the top man to hoist him up. This was done instantly, but on nearing the surface he was seen to let go all hold, and fall to the bottom, a distance of 150 feet, and, of course, was crushed almost to a jelly.

Other People's Feelings and Failings.

Most of us have a very tender regard for our own feelings. We do not like to have them injured. We are amazed that people can be so rude and clumsy as to tread upon our toes, or roughly expose to the air our scarcely-healed wound. But so weak is human nature and so prone are we to think less generously of others than of ourselves, that we often sin in the very way which we would be selfishest to condemn in our neighbors. It is a great delight to meet a man or woman who is always considerate, gentle and polite in his treatment of those he or she meets in daily life.

This topic came up around the breakfast-table in a city home one morning lately. You, happy readers, who live in the country, know comparatively little of the persistent annoyances which city folks undergo from the continual rappings and ringings and shoutings and screamings of people who go from door to door to buy, to sell, or to beg. The room in which the breakfast alluded to as being taken was a front basement, on a pleasant street, interesting a busy thoroughfare. Coffee was poured, biscuits had been passed, eggs were being broken, fruit was being pared.

Interruption No. 1: "Any rags-a-ages?"

The speaker darkened the window with his head and dimmed the shining glass with his breath, as he hurled this remark, ascending, interrogative and declamatory, at our shivering ears. Somebody shook her curls at him pleasantly, and he departed with a jingling of bells at the hand-cart he was wheeling along, and a fainter cry of "Any rags-a-ges?" gradually lessening in the air as he went his way.

Interruption No. 2: "Please, ma'am, any cold meat and bread?"

It is a little, bluelooking, pinched-looking wite of a boy, with a basket nearly as big as himself. "Don't encourage professional beggars," says the gentleman of the house.

"O! my dear," returns the lady, as she sweeps the contents of the breakfast-plate into the not fastidiously clean receptacle. "I can't refuse a child when he looks as hungry as that little fellow does. Just think. It might be our own Harry."

Interruption No. 3: Man rings the door-bell violently. Domestic responds. Presently she enters and inquires if the mistress can step out and look at some patent dredges of stationery, etc.

"No!" cries paterfamilias, loud enough to be heard outside. "Tell him to be off with his trash."

"My dear," the lady urges, seriously, having dismissed the children first, "I do wish you would not be so impolite in your manner to tramps and peddlers. It is their only way of carrying a livelihood, and I think Christians ought to be kind to them."

"I fully agree with you. Your sentiments and mine precisely correspond, but your politeness is greater than mine, you see. How you endure it, staying here all day, too, is quite beyond me to comprehend. I believe in politeness to one's equals and superiors—but I won't take my hat off to inferiors."

"A tramp is not necessarily your inferior, my friend," observed the Philosopher, who happened to be staying at the house, and who was giving lectures in the lyceum course. "I have heard of tramps who had at one time been millionaires, and of others who had received the education of a university."

"I shouldn't wonder," said Madame, meditatively balancing her spoon on the compassionate edge of her Sevres teacup.

"I shouldn't wonder if you called Homer a tramp, or Diogenes, if either of them were living now."

"Very likely," replied Mousieur, taking up the newspaper, to find out better our Representative in Congress had been giving any more National object-lessons on good manners. And then the talk drifted to the affairs of the day, what engagements each had, what visits were to be made, what shopping done, which closets cleaned, etc., etc.

One person only remembered the morning's discussion, and sat down to think upon this matter of courtesy. And she came to the conclusion that courtesy is a word of very wide meaning. It is an index finger to character. You observe a true lady, a true gentleman, anywhere. They cannot commit a rudeness. It would hurt them and jar them to wound the feelings of the lowest and the furthest below them. To be truly polite implies that one shall be thoughtful of the feelings of everybody, and of inferiors most of all.

When are we to begin our training in this regard?

With our little children, at once. Do not permit Sue or Jennie, unprovoked, to bother or tease or annoy Bridget in the kitchen. Never let them allude to her as the "servant-girl," or speak of "servant-girls" in her presence. The phrase may define her position, but she does not like to hear it, and it takes off the bloom of their refinement every time they use it. Do not jump to pick up your own thimble which has rolled away when Charlie is in the room, but bid him bring it to you, and say "Thank you" to him for the kindness.

Do not encourage in yourself the habit of criticising and commenting upon the foibles or faults of any member of your own family. There is nothing gained by it, and a great deal is lost. Love itself is often choked back and blindered in its growth by the rank sturdiness of weeds which spring up against it, unchecked, in homes where people say all manner of ungentle speeches to each other.

If you want to cultivate real happiness, cultivate goodness. Think more of others' excellent qualities than of their failings, and be gentle and amiable to all.—Christian at Work.

Kicking a Bear.

Jack was in the woods, on his way home from the sap trees, where he had been boiling maple sugar. It was a mild day in March. The snow was six feet deep, and the warm spring air had softened the surface so that no one could walk on it without snow-shoes, a pair of which Jack had on his feet.

He was unarmed. As he walked on, he came to a fallen tree directly in his way. He stepped upon it, but as he did so, a large bear rose up behind it and rasped at him with open paws.

The warm air had roused the creature from her winter sleep and she was furious with hunger.

Taken wholly by surprise, Jack gave a tremendous leap which carried him a distance of ten feet from the trunk of the tree. But he sank deeply into the snow, and the bear was upon him before he could extricate himself.

Then the battle began, man and beast rolling over and over each other in a desperate struggle. As often as the bear tried to seize him with her teeth, or overpower him with the fatal hug, Jack would save himself by kicking her on the nose with his snow-shoes.

Finally, with one fierce plunge of claws and teeth, the brute fastened upon Jack, and failing to hold him, tore off almost all his clothing at a single sweep.

Fortunately just at this moment he hit the top of her nose a powerful kick. A blow on the end of the nose causes pain so acute as to disable a bear for a time, and it had the effect in this case.

The brute gave back a little, and, while she was wincing under the pain, Jack regained his feet and got several steps away.

His assailant started after him again, but the snow was so soft she almost buried herself at every step, while Jack walked on the surface and escaped. So his snow-shoes, which rendered him a clumsy lighter, finally saved his life.—Forest and Stream.

A Prarie-Dog Village.

Four hundred and thirty-five miles west of Omaha is situated the great Prairie-dog City, one of the largest settlements on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad. Several hundred acres, each size of the track, have been taken up by the sagacious little prairie-dogs, and there they have made their homes, and that without buying one lot from the company, or as much as saying "by your leave." The dwellings consist of little mounds, from a foot to eighteen inches in height, raised by the dirt excavated by their burrows. On the approach of a train, the little inhabitants can be seen scampering for their homes. Arrived there, they squat upon their hind feet at the entrance a hole in the top—barking at the train as it passes. Should anyone venture too near, down they go, and their city is as silent as the "city of the dead." It is said that the opening in the top leads to a subterraneous chamber connecting with the next dwelling, and so on through the settlement, but this is a mistake. The prairie-dog is of a sandy-brown color, and about the size of a large gray squirrel. In their nest, living with them, are found the owl and the rattlesnake, though whether welcome or not is uncertain. He lives upon grasses and roots, and is generally fat, and is by some, Mexicans especially, considered good eating, and his flesh is sweet and tender though rather greasy. Wolves prey on the little fellows, and may be seen sneaking near the town, hoping by chance to pick up some straggler. But the dogs are not easily caught. Some one is always on the lookout for danger, and gives the alarm on the first intimation of trouble. Then away they all scamper to their holes.—Omaha Herald.

The Telephone Without a Magnetic Battery—Interesting Experiment.

Much is said and many descriptions given of the telephone, the phonograph and aerophone in the periodicals of the day, but one of, perhaps, the most simple forms and uses of the telephone, seems to have almost escaped notice. The form operated through the assistance of the magnetic battery, in consequence of the perhaps unlimited distance over which it may be operated, as well as its general adaptability to nearly all circumstances, is, and probably will be, of most general use. Still it has the serious faults of indistinctness of articulation, of unnatural, metallic and resonant sound of the voice, and requisition of skilled workmanship in its construction. The same fault in a degree applies to the simpler form without a battery, as commonly described, viz., with a line of wire, string or thread, with common tin fruit-cans for cups or drums.

A lengthy series of experiments with a variety of drums and lines or conductors has entirely removed those objections; and the articulation and every inflection of the voice delivered (and recognized, if a person is present) as distinctly as if in immediate presence.

A neighbor, Mr. Thomas, and myself have experimented on a line of 270 feet, with tin cans, using the can bottom, paper, parchment and bladder for drums. Then with pasteboard and wooden boxes of various size, with variety material for drums; also on iron and copper wire, silk, linen and cotton cord and thread for conductors. And from all we have the most satisfactory results from the following described and simple arrangement: Take a cigar box; then put the thread through, knot, and then paste another piece over the knot. This gives strength and solidity. Larger threads or cords are less liable to break, but will not yield to each minute inflection of the voice. They are also subject to greater contraction and extension from wet and dry weather.

The line on which we have experimented connects with our separate residences, ninety yards apart, passing through small holes in the window sash.

Under favorable conditions of still, light or rare and dry atmosphere, every word and peculiarity is as distinct as when face to face. Even whispered words are distinctly audible. Nor is it necessary, as with lines worked with a battery, to have the voice or ear in close contact with the drum.

The vibrations become more distinct at distances of from six to fifteen feet from the drums.

Conversation has been held on it with both speaker and hearer eighteen feet from the drums.

Wet or windy weather interferes more or less with the operation. Another line of like construction at Kansas City, of 1,000 feet in length, works nearly as distinctly as ours. How much further it might be extended with success I know not.—A. L. Child (Plattsmouth, Neb.), in Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Miner's Fatal Trap.

A placer miner, whose claim is near Iowa Hill, in Placer County, had had his sluice-boxes robbed on several occasions, and although he tried all ordinary methods for detecting the perpetrators, failed to do so. Finally he determined upon a plan which was as novel as it was terrible in execution. A quicksilver tank was charged with powerful explosives and placed in such a position that no sluice robbers could approach the boxes without coming in contact with an ingenious arrangement which would explode the implement of death and mail them into eternity with the precision of a bursting bomb. On Sunday last the inventor of this apparatus (whose name our informant failed to obtain) went to the locality where he had it "planted," when, by some strange and unknown accident, it exploded. Its power to do the work for which it had been made was fully demonstrated. The corner was shattered into a thousand atoms—a victim to his own inventive faculties.—Nevada (Cal.) Democrat.

AGRICULTURAL BREVITIES.

—The following agricultural and domestic brevities are taken from the Iowa State Register:

By neat and tasteful surroundings the humblest cottage can be made a palace.

Spring is as far advanced in Europe as in America—both being a month earlier.

Potatoes should be cut and spread out to dry in the shade for three or four days before planting.

The Hessian fly only flourishes in damp or wet seasons, while the chinch bug flourishes in dry years.

The most careful business men of the present day commenced business on a farm, and early learned the worth of a dollar.

Sheep will always injure a hedge fence, and if they can work at it on both sides will kill out any sized hedge in about three years.

If a farmer or business man wishes to know how great a spendthrift he is let him keep an exact memorandum of all time thus spent.

The butter spoiled in this country by ignorance and carelessness in manufacturing, if well made, would sell for enough more to soon pay the National debt.

The speculative farmer is the man of large means and a small stock of practical sense. He invests his money in expensive buildings, and unavailable stock—fails and reports farming as unprofitable.

Chloride of lime is cheap, and it should be applied freely to all cellars. The past winter and spring has been hard on vegetables, and many cellars are in a foul condition. As life and health are valuable, neglect not this precaution.

At the Canada Dairymen's Association, the President contended that "she could get as much milk in winter as in summer, and he found his cows fell off in quantity of milk when first turned to pasture. He thought milk could be as cheaply produced in winter as in summer, unless the cows were kept largely by soiling. The general system of pasturing was very wasteful of land. Winter butter brought even a better price than summer made butter."

The National Live Stock Journal is for more schools: "We have reached a new departure, which must soon be introduced; practical agricultural schools, for the more thorough education of dairymen, and the advancement of this great industry. The factories have done, and will continue to do, good; but they are not schools of experiment, schools of discovery, schools for the demonstration of the true road."

Homestead Drainage.

The question of drainage is one of the most important with which the farmers of the West have to deal. In this line drainage is the leading one. Grounds is of the first importance, especially so since this may be accomplished at a comparatively light cost, when we compare the value returned. When the barn yard and its surroundings are directly connected, as in close proximity to the house and the well, from which the daily drinking water of the family is drawn, the question of drainage often becomes a serious one, and for this reason: The water of drainage sinks from the surface directly to the water-line in the earth, and thence horizontally, or along the natural declivity of porous strata, to the nearest outlet. In a majority of cases this will be found to be in the well. Why? If for no other reason, from the well-known fact that insect life, during droughts, bore to the nearest living water, the well, and when the rains again saturate the earth, direct open channels are thus left where the water of drainage flows, loaded with the secretions of the sinks, the privy and the barnyard. Hence is well—as is even seen and every precaution should be used to cut off and convey away these accumulations by means of underdrain.

Next to this source of disease, undrained cellars are prolific breeding places of miasma. It is safe to say that of the farm cellars of this State, and not one quarter of the farm houses are provided with cellars at all—fourthirds are without sufficient drainage, and for the reason that it is considered impractical to drain them. Even where a lame attempt at drainage is made the water-ways are generally of plank or other perishable material, without traps to prevent the return of foul gases, thus adding to the danger of infection by miasma. Those who have made this mistake should lose no time in taking up these plans of leaving others of vitrified pipe which may be cheply bought in any city.

There are very few farm house sites in the West where the drainage is not comparatively easy; few places where lines of ditch or drain will not give a perfect outflow from a cellar seven feet deep. Nevertheless if such be the case, the only way is to continue the drain until a sufficient outfall is reached. In the ditch, after the bottom is carefully leveled so the fall will be equal, lay three-inch glazed pipe, with shoulders so one may be fitted in the other and cemented tight; else there will be leakage at the joints, the ground will be saturated, decomposition will ensue, and malaria be surely generated. Just after the drain leaves the cellar a joint of pipe should be laid forming an elbow or Y. This serves as a trap to keep all foul gases from entering the cellar, and below this trap one from the sink and other conveniences of the house where water is used, may be inserted, being careful in every case to guard each separate pipe with a trap next where the water enters from the house. It would also be well to lay a pipe from the well connecting with the cellar drain below the trap. Thus the sewer may be flushed during droughts and washed clean at will by means of a tank connected therewith. If a windmill is used the whole will be simplified.

The outlet to the cellar drain requires looking after. If it do not end in a running stream, the deposit should not be allowed to accumulate. Some means for saturating and removing the deposit should be used at such seasons as will not permit its running away. If no other means are at hand it may be planted with willows, or other trees that absorb strongly the juices. Instances of trees planted near sewers and catch basins absorbing by their roots the noxious principles contained therein would seem to be pretty well authenticated, and it deserves extensive trial.—Prairie Farmer.

Planting Corn Does Not Insure the Gathering.

THE farmers upon our broad Western prairies come as near, perhaps, gathering nearly all crops as any part of the year, without labor as any other people, but it so happens that the crops which grow spontaneously are the most persistent enemies the cultivated farmer has to contend with. In view of this, the prudent businessman begins away back, at the time of the ripening and maturing of the seed germs, which constitute the incipient stages of the future crop, to gather up and keep in store the forces which shall combine to bring forth the desired results. The seed corn must not only be gathered as soon as it arrives at a state of maturity and placed in a state of perfect preservation, but the largest and most perfect ears must be selected, so that the quality of the succeeding crops may in every particular be equal to the seed which produced it. The seed has been secured in good order, as of the first importance, a place congenial must be provided in which to plant it. The cornfield may be either large or small, with the improved machinery for the cultivation of corn, according to the skill and the farmer, or to the extent which he understands all the conditions and requirements of this remunerative crop. The crops may be poisoned and ruined by an over-supply of some kinds of manures, while the corn grows apace and delights in the abundant richness.

Soils can hardly be too fertile for this tropical plant. If the land is rich, it matters little what are the elements for a heavy yield of grain.

The land is not always fertile in the qualities which it may best possess. It may have been originally so, but a succession of crops has exhausted it of the proper conditions, and the seed-corn is laid down in the old, lazy manner so we must take these things as we find them, as it is so near pleasing time again. After the cool, open winter which has passed, much of the land will be inclined to bake, so that the earlier the plowing is done the more time the soil will have to become mellow and assume its normal ameliorated condition. The old idea of waiting until corn-planting time before plowing the ground to have a fresh place to plant in, is erroneous. Our advice is, to plow as soon as the ground is in condition. If it occurs in the month of March. If plowed so early, the ground becomes settled, packed down, and with a pulverized and well-pulverized surface, the planter may be passed over the ground with much less labor, and the seed corn placed at a uniform depth near the surface, so that it will germinate with greater certainty, come up quicker and grow with more vigor than when placed at some indefinite distance beneath the surface. Such early plowed land holds the moisture for the second growth, after the crop has been removed, and keeps the atmosphere left to circulate through it.

With good seed corn, the ground plowed and prepared in the proper manner, and the corn cultivated thoroughly before and soon after it comes up—the Western farmer seldom fails to realize a large yield of grain of excellent quality. Every operation in the production of corn may be hurried except the planting. We do not think it pays to plant corn before the soil gets warm enough to sprout it readily, unless later than the middle of May, north of 41 degs. north latitude. There will this year, no doubt, be much bad seed corn, as there has been in years past, and every precaution should be used to make good the deficiency that the individual failures, which so frequently occur, may be avoided.—Western Rural.

Dr. LaMoyne does not believe that the bill introduced lately in the Pennsylvania legislature making vaccination a penal offense with $500 fine, will be passed, stop cremation, and says that he will test the law in the courts. Some of the ashes of the late Mrs. Pitman are still kept at the doctor's office.

—When Mr. Greeley once upon a time was lecturing in Indiana, in the palmy days of State banks, the committee of one town paid him unexpectedly in notes of the local institution. He looked at them, and then said: "Could not you give me, instead of this stuff, a well-executed counterfeit on some Eastern bank?"

VEGETINE

IS RECOMMENDED BY ALL PHYSICIANS.

VALLEY STREAM, QUEENS CO., LONG ISLAND, N.Y.
MR. H. R. STEVENS
Dear Sir:—I feel it my duty to testify that I had been suffering from a severe cough, and pain in my chest, which caused me to be confined to my bed. I was induced to try your VEGETINE, and have had the desired effect from the first dose. I had not expect to live from day to day, and so physicians had given up my case. I am now entirely restored to health, and can recommend VEGETINE to all who are afflicted as I was. I would kindly recommend to try it before all other medicines, as it is certainly the best blood purifier.
By the use of VEGETINE
MRS. WM. H. FOSHER.

VEGETINE.—When the blood becomes impure and stagnant, either from change of weather or of climate, from impure food or drink, irregular diet, or from any other cause, the best remedy to use is VEGETINE. It will act directly upon the blood, and will remove all impurities from it, and impart a healthy tone to the whole system.

MR. H. R. STEVENS
Dear Sir:—I take pleasure in stating that I had been suffering from a cancerous humor on my right breast, which baffled the skill of the best physicians in this section. I was induced to try VEGETINE, and after taking a few bottles of it, my health and spirits began to improve, and I continued its use until I was entirely restored to health. I have no hesitation in recommending VEGETINE to all who are afflicted with cancerous humors, as I feel confident it will do for them what it has done for me.
Yours truly,
MRS. E. T. FORBES.

VEGETINE

Is the Best Blood Purifier

I testify that I am personally acquainted with the foregoing statement, and consider her case of any kind a bad one.

—Lieut. Longnecker, U. S. N., just before the Wyoming sailed for France, with her cargo of American exhibits for the Paris Exposition, went to Philadelphia and got married, to the surprise not only of his own friends, but of those of his wife. As ladies are not allowed to travel on vessels belonging to the navy, he shipped Mrs. Long to Paris by steamer, and sailed a day later himself in the Wyoming. After the ship had half way over, the latter slow and rotten old tub had to put back for repairs, leaving the happy Mrs. Longnecker to land there Lieut. Longnecker.

A Gallant Act.

Life is full of opportunities for self-sacrificing devotion, which every now and then it accepts in unexpected places. Of this truth, the terrible ride to death of one of Barnum's circus drivers last week affords a striking illustration. He had driven over to his home in or near North avenue, with a team of six splendid coal-black horses, and an empty baggage wagon. The animals had been highly fed, had no work to do, were ready for their spring campaign, and were in splendid condition. It was said that the two leaders weighed 1,200 pounds each, and the pole horses 1,300. Starting for the circus grounds, the railroad; an engine let off steam; the horses, startled, sprang into a run down Forty-second street. The driver at instantly threw his whole weight on the brake and gathered up the reins to guide the utterly unable to check his team. The wheels, built for the brake, slid over the pavement, leaving a train of sparks behind them. He guided the horses on the full run across Ninth, Eighth, Seventh and Sixth avenues, on each of which are horse-car tracks, turning out to avoid them. He was necessarily missing it; between two lines of wagons on either side of the street in one crowded place, where there was but just room to pass; across Fifth avenue, and then down the slight decline toward the Grand Central Station. Here there are always massed a number of carriages and horse-cars, and to avoid them, he was necessary to make a considerable detour. The driver, with great skill and coolness, turned his maddened horses at an angle of nearly forty-five degrees, and passed the carriages in safety; but in doing so the hind wheel caught in the horse-car track, the iron axle was snapped off like a pipe-stem, the wheel was thrown with the violence of the shock a great away; the driver pulled up, longer keep his seat, still holding fast to the reins, he endeavored to climb back to a place of greater safety, when the plunging of the wagon threw him with a terrible rebound into the air, he fell over the dashboard, struck his horses on the flank, fell under the wagon, and was instantly killed, whether by the violence of the fall or by a blow from the wheel we do not clearly understand from the conflicting accounts. A moment later and the no longer guided horses brought the wagon up against a telegraph-pole, snapping it asunder, but holding the wagon fast and releasing the horses, who, with their strength spent, were now easily caught. Exceptive driver's, not a life was lost, and the horses had not received a scratch. They had run more than a mile through one of the most frequented of the up-town cross streets. There is a lesson for all of us in this simple story of martyrdom to fidelity and duty that would only be weakened by the attempt to draw the moral from it.—Christian Union.

Dr. Pierce's Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel—Grand Opening.

Dr. R. V. Pierce opened his new Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel, on Buffalo, N. Y., on the 22d of April, with a reception to the press, followed by one on the 23d to the citizens, both of which were largely attended and highly enjoyed by all the guests, whom the genial Doctor received and entertained in the most princely style. The structure itself is magnificent and imposing, in style of architecture being what is known as the modern French. Situated as it is, on the highest ground in the city, with a pleasant wooded lawn before it, sloping gently to the Niagara River, it commands the finest and healthiest position obtainable, especially as Buffalo is probably the healthiest city in the country. Skilful combinations of maple, ash, oak, cherry, ebony and mahogany, with tiles in ascending colors, form the rare set effects in the several halls and parlors. It is heated throughout by steam, and fresh water is drawn from the street by a large pump, which forces it up into tanks on the fourth, fifth and sixth stories. Pure air and sunshine being two of Dr. Pierce's favorite medicines, the system of ventilation is, therefore, most perfect—every room being so constructed as to receive full outdoor air and provided with a double escape for any air which has become impure. The system of rank ventilation to invalids needs no comment. There is not a room in the house that is not visited by sunshine, or from the door of which a staircase cannot be seen. On every floor there are four stations, each provided with 100 feet of hose, connected with the Champion chemical fire-extinguishing system, and which, with the assistance of the speaking sustainer, can be made instantaneously available. Everything pertaining to the medical department is placed down upon the basement floor, thus giving no unpleasant suggestions of the sick room to those guests who of not need a physician. Here is found the Swedish health-lift, reception-room, consultation-rooms, of which there are several, each one for some special class of diseases—all tastefully arranged and well supplied with the appliances necessary to their different departments. The bath system is arranged in the most complete and luxurious manner. The rooms are large and lifted up with glazed tiles, and comprise Turkish, Russian and other baths. In the matter of recreation, the house is well supplied, having a bowling-alley, billiard-room and parlors for ladies and gentlemen. The capacity of the house is about 250 guests. The tower, 140 feet from the ground, rears its magnificent head above the whole, making a grand coup d'œil. The hotel opened for business on the 1st of May. The enterprise will doubtless meet with that unbounded success which it most surely deserves.

—It is reported that a church in Georgia was about to marry a couple, a lady objected on the ground that the intended bride was not of age; and her parents were ignorant of the act. The clergyman said it was not a legal objection, and decided to put the matter to vote. A unanimous ayed by the congregation was the result, and the knot was tied.

A WELL-TO-DO farmer in Ulster County, N. Y., who wanted a wife, took a woman on trial for a week, to ascertain her housekeeping qualities. She suited, and he married her.

"Marry her! by George! I would if it wasn't for her confounded nose."

Nose! Ha, ha! What's the matter with her nose? Is it too short, too long, or crooked exactly? Nothing of the kind, young man. A woman may be a charming wife and have her nose of any dimensions. No one can be pretty in regard to it. Nevertheless, all other personal defects are forgotten in the joy of possessing a beautiful complexion, and in the imitation of the country and

MINNEAPOLIS CONFLAGRATION.

How to be Secured From the Effects of a Like Calamity.

To protect one's life and property against unforeseen accident and destruction is a duty scarcely anyone will dispute, but just the means to be used may be, and is, debatable. Death will come to all; and loss by one of the most valuable property as well as the foulest house is recorded every day of the year, and will be, so long as time shall continue. Whose life is to be cut off, or whose home is to be destroyed no one can tell. Neither can they even suspect when or how, certainly not when they are expecting it; the sound they be ready to extinguish the devouring element in its incipient stage spark of existence. Either like the dreadful explosion at Minneapolis, or at the dead hours of midnight, or perhaps when the household are peacefully at rest, as in the fatal conflagration of Boston, Mass., the flames strike. In our opinion there is but one, and only one, remedy or security, and that is a Policy of Insurance in some good sound Insurance Company.

And among all the responsible fire insurance companies in our country we know of none presenting better security to the farmer and those residing in towns than the American Insurance Company, of Chicago. Confining its business to farm property, dwelling houses, private farms, their contents, churches and school houses scattering on principle in most of the large cities, and only $5,000 in any one risk, making a general distribution of insurance throughout its possibilities—with such assets amounting to $244,-238.31, having $105,836.16 more than is necessary under the Insurance Laws to pay all liabilities, and to which all outstanding claims. In addition to which it has over one million of dollars of contributed assets and a wide-spread and reliable reputation for fair dealing and prompt payment of losses. Home office, Mutual Building, Madison Street, West of Dearborn, Chicago, Ill.

The following Statement of amount of cash paid to Twenty-Two Farmers during the largest business in the State of Illinois during the year 1877, as shown by the official report on file in the Insurance Department of said State, places the "American" at the head of the list, and also shows the total receipts in Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Wisconsin, Iowa and Ohio, in the same companies.

The popular impression that a great many of the Government bonds were sold at discount, and that thereby a heavy loss was incurred, is not correct. None of the bonds since Buchanan was President have been sold at less than par. On the other hand many have been sold at a premium. We have somewhere seen a statement which we presume to be authentic, to the effect that the treasury has received from these premiums nearly sixty five millions of dollars.

The fool seeketh to pick a fly off from a mule's hind leg. The wise man letteth the job to the highest bidder. The wise housewife always buys Smith's saleratus which is made by the new process. Always full weight and is stronger than other brands. Always call for Smith's Saleratus.

A scheme is reported to be on foot in Illinois to bring out Hon. John A. Logan for State Treasurer this fall. It is believed by his friends that thorough canvass of the State by him would result in the election of a Republican Legislature, and that a Republican Legislature would immediately vote the presidency of Illinois politics by returning Gen. Logan to the United States Senate. Gen. Logan denies that he is working up any such programme.

Senator Dorsey, of Arkansas, and Representative Hubbell, of Michigan, the two members of the Republican Congressional Committee to whom is entrusted the duty of raising funds for the coming campaign, report that they are meeting with encouraging success. Republican Senators have all contributed $100 each, and Republican Representatives are following their example. Heads of departments and bureaus, and clerks, will be invited to subscribe, although every one will be assured that contributions are not to be obligatory, and that a refusal to subscribe to the campaign fund will not endanger the official tenure of any one.

Says the Cincinnati Gazette: "Let all the alleged frauds in connection with the late Presidential election be thoroughly and fairly investigated, and the result will show that Hayes was entitled to fifty more electoral votes than were counted for him. The Republican members in Congress will join the Democrats in favor of such an investigation. Let the facts come out, not only in reference to Louisiana and Florida, but Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Indiana, Ohio, New Jersey, New York and Connecticut also. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth is what is wanted." Yes, it is what the Republicans want, but it is just what the Democrats don't want and what they most fear.

The Washington correspondent of the Detroit Post & Tribune speaks with well merited commendation of the Republicans of Mr. Conger's Congressional District for their course in keeping him so long in Congress. By that they have secured one of the most efficient legislators, standing to day as a prominent leader in the House. This he has acquired by his long experience. Mr. Luttrell, of the Upper District, is also making his mark and increasing his influence. The correspondent gives a needed admonition to the other Districts, and speaks well when he says: "No member, whatever his capacity may be, can become sufficiently acquainted with the forms of legislation, the rules of the House and the order of business, in a single term, and at the end of the session he has just begun to make himself really useful. If an honest man, will, fair capacity, the longer he is kept in Congress after that, the more effectually he can serve his constituents and the State." Of Congressman Stone he says: "Though Judge Stone has not yet attempted to show his skill in debate, he has efficiency as a working member, and will, when occasion present, take his part in the discussion of the two important questions now before Congress." And he adds: "With experience, then, the Michigan delegation in Congress will reflect credit on the State, and justify the wisdom of their constituents in keeping them in the House, in the first place till they had been educated in legislative affairs, and then because they have thereby become doubly useful to them."

STATE OF MICHIGAN Thirteenth Judicial Circuit, in Chancery.

Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the county of Charlevoix in Chancery at the village of Charlevoix in said county, on the sixth day of May, A. D. 1878.

Present, Hon. Reuben Hatch, Jr., Circuit Judge.

Richmond National Bank, Complainant, vs

Henry C. Morden and Agnes A. Burdeu, Defendants.

In this cause, it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendants, Henry C. Morden and Agnes A. Morden, are not residents of this State, but are residents of Denver, in the county of Mingi, and State of Indiana. On motion of Hinsdale & Fletcher, complainant's solicitors, ordered that the appearance of said non-resident defendants, and each of them be entered herein within three months from the date of this order, and in case of their appearance they cause their answer to the Bill of Complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on them of a copy of said Bill and notice of this order; and in default thereof said Bill will be taken as confessed by said non-resident defendants; and it is further ordered that within twenty days the complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that said publication be continued therein once in each week for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non resident defendants at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for their appearance.

MORTGAGE SALE.—Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage dated the 17th day of December, A. D. 1874, made and executed by Mary Ann Cain, to Samuel A. Sabin, of Charlevoix County, Mich., and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 30th day of December A. D. 1874, in Liber one of Mortgages, on page 284, which Mortgage was duly assigned by the said Newton A. Balch to Lydia Smith and Rachel S. Smith, of Ann Arbor, Michigan, on the 24 day of February, 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the county of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan aforesaid, in Liber One of Mortgages, on page 420, on which Mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of Two hundred and fifteen Dollars and thirty-three cents, and an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for in said Mortgage, and no proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and the statute in such case made and provided; Notice is hereby given that on Saturday, the 16th day of May, A. D. 1878, at two o'clock in the afternoon, I shall sell at public auction to the highest bidder, at the Court House in the Village of Charlevoix, (that being the place where the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix is held) the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the amount due on said mortgage, with seven per cent interest, and all legal costs, together with an attorney's fee of thirty dollars provided for therein; the premises being described in said mortgage as the south half of the north west quarter of Section Fourteen (14) in Township Thirty-two (32) North, of Range Five (5) West, containing Eighty (80) acres, per United States survey.

PROBATE ORDER.—State of Michigan County of Charlevoix, ss.—At a session of the Probate Court for said County, held at the Probate Office, in the village of Charlevoix, on Friday the 24th day of January, A. D. 1878.

Present, J. Milo Eaton, Judge of Probate.

On reading and filing the petition, duly verified, of Newton Yeoman, praying that a certain instrument now on file in this County, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, may be admitted to probate, and that Amelia K. Hayes may be appointed executrix thereof. Therefore, It is ordered, that Saturday, the 23d day of February next at ten o'clock in the forenoon, be assigned for the hearing of said petition, and that the heirs-at-law of said deceased, and all other persons interested in said estate are required to appear at a session of said Court, then to be holden at the Probate Office in the Village of Charlevoix, and show cause, if any there be, why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted.

And it is further ordered, that said petitioner give notice to the persons interested in said estate, of the pendency of said petition and the hearing thereof, by causing a copy of this order to be printed in the Charlevoix SENTINEL, a newspaper printed and circulating in said County three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing.

J. MILO EATON, Judge of Probate.

(A true copy.)

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 17, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Brother Jonathan's hospitable domain has for many years been a favorite temporary resort of certain classes of foreign nobility; of those who are attracted hither by the love of travel and the New World's farm, as well as of those chevaliers d'industrie who, rightfully or wrongfully assuming the titles of count, baron, &c., so decently worshipped by our shabby element, fly from the uncongenial society of the European police to the newer and more easily worked fields which our large cities present. It is much rarer, however, that the owners of noble titles voluntarily lay them down and cross the water in our direction from a preference for a freer and simpler life than their native surroundings would permit. Still such cases do occasionally occur, and in fact I now know of two instances of the kind at the present moment. In a small Long Island town, where I have been several times during the year, there has lived since early in the present decade a young English earl, whose family and title date back to 1600. The young fellow earns a modest living as a fish-man, lives in an unpainted cottage with his wife and baby, and though he has been urgently entreated to return to England resists too well contented with his active life and absolute independence here, to desire the frigid conventionality of his English home.

The other case is that of a genuine Italian duke, who, a generation ago, was the most dashing and popular nobleman at the Neapolitan court. The history of his life and of the adventures which finally led him to America, is too long to be rehearsed, but I assure your readers that it would make, with but little departure from fact, a most exciting and fascinating novel. He landed in New York some twenty years since, and after a roving tour of the country settled down in quiet obscurity in the then quiet little town of Hoboken. The modest restaurant which he opened grew in favor and in size until it became a hotel which is to-day a favorite resort of lovers of fine Italian cookery, and which bears the title of its high-born proprietor. Some of your readers may know the place from so much description, and it is even not impossible that some may have enjoyed its bed and board, little suspecting the rank of their fine looking and venerable host.

If gold were flowing out of the country at the rate its population is doing, there would be little hopes of redemption next January. All the European steamers are going out crowded with a full quota of the throng which the magnetic force of the paris exposition drawn from every quarter. So strong are the attractions of the Champ de Mars, that nobody seems to be able to get away from it. One boat which, on its last outward trip took 150 cabin passengers to Europe, has just came back bringing one solitary passenger, who, in his lonely majesty was, like Alexander Selkirk, "monarch of all he surveyed."

All this makes rather a bad lookout for the American watering places, which will suffer this season, but it is a harvest to the steamship companies, who are making lots of money despite the lowered fare. It is also largely swelling the business of the accident insurance companies, or rather company, for the 'Travelers', of Hartford, which is the only concern of the kind in the country amounting to much, is doing it all. Every sensible man takes out an accident policy which undertaking so important a journey, and so the ubiquitous agencies of this energetic corporation are so many beehives. The Travelers' has paid already some two hundred thousand dollars on marine losses within a few years past, but it is to be hoped, for the sake of the thousands who are not now trusting themselves to the briny deep that its operation during this summer will be all clear profit. Altogether, this company has paid over thirty thousand accident claims, amounting to almost three millions of dollars, and yet it grows larger and stronger every year.

It looks a little as though, in spite of all the recent pacific announcement, Russia felt that her chances were good for more fighting before the present European troubles are settled. Beside the mysterious Cimbria, whose manoeverings about the coast of Maine under command of Russian officers, the Herald states that Russian agents have chartered seventeen other American steamers for an indefinite period. Add to these facts the further one that rifles are being turned out for them by the hundred thousand at Providence, and we have a state of things which justifies a suspicion that the Muscovites mean business.

Those who read my letters last year will recollect the description of the first New York Beach show of dogs and of the great success which it was. The second annual show is now in progress and is more extensive than before, the entries of "dog flesh" numbering over a thousand. Beside the regular assortment of hunting dogs there is a tremendous congregation of the little pets, the pugs, poodles, and terriers of high life, whose temporary confinement is in many instances rendered endurable by the constant attentions of their proud and devoted masticaes. About $5,000 will be distributed as prizes among the winning animals of the various classes.

The most exciting and successful whale fight ever known in these parts took place last week in Raritan bay, on the neighboring Jersey coast. Some oystermen, seeing what they took for part of a wreck floating in the water, investigated it, and found it to be one of those big fish which had strayed from its haunts and was swimming slowly up and down in the shoal water. One of the men bolder than the rest, tried to stab it with an oyster knife, and nearly got swamped for his pains. Later on five men procured and several blows dealt upon the head of the monster by the crew of fishermen, who by this time had become reckless of danger. But even this heroic treatment seemed to have little effect beyond enraging the formidable creature, which would undoubtedly have escaped but for its getting aground near the shore. Here it was soon dispatched, measured, and found to be about forty feet in length and nine in thickness. It is estimated that $1,000 worth of oil will be got out of its carcass.

O'Leary the pedestrian is back from England loaded with honors and the more substantial trophies of his trip, including the grand belt, to compete for which his voyage was undertaken, and a magnificent clock of gold, bronze, and marble, presented by his admirers in Dublin, besides nearly $4,000 in money. The belt is a massive affair of silver and enamelled gold, bearing appropriate inscriptions. To make this prize his undisputed property, O'Leary must win two more matches against the first challengers who put up the required stake. O'Leary states that during the six long days of this great London walk he took no solid food whatever, and lost fourteen pounds in weight. When walking he grips a corncob in each hand to absorb its moister and give it something to hold.

And now that tens of physical endurance have become the rage, a lady singer belonging to one of our city choirs announces that she will soon accomplish publicly the feat of singing three consecutive hours without rest. She had a private rehearsal of this performance two or three days since, and is said to have gone through with the apparently task without difficulty. Large crowds will be attracted to this novel concert.

It is not such unprofitable business, this selling out a big railroad. George T. Curtis, who officiated as referee of the Erie, has just been awarded $13,500 for this service, and he did not hurt himself with hard work in the matter either. He claimed $30,000.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequaled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles 10 cts., 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crouter.

Oppression in Egypt.

Egypt is a country groaning beneath a frightful tyranny. Writing to an English journal, from Assouan, Mr. Douglas Murray says:

"Provisions, always dear, are now at higher prices than ever, and how the year's taxes will be raised in Upper Egypt is a mystery yet to be solved. I suppose those who can't pay will suffer the usual penalty—the bastinado and imprisonment without food. They may die, and it matters nothing to the Government, which lives for the day, and apparently cares nothing for the future. The unfortunate people are constantly taken from their own homes to work on the Khedive's estates and factories. A small proportion is taken from the land he is cultivating. His camel and donkey are carried off to the factory, where it is all week and no pay. A medicum of sugar cane or corn is all he gets till the mills have finished the season's work. His land is deserted. If he has crops they are seized. He is promised payment, but never gets a farthing. The landholders are charged enormous rents, and every profession and trade pays for its license. Thousands of the bazaar shops are closed to escape taxes. Even a cook's boy has to pay $12 a year for a license, and a donkey boy pays not only for his own license, but for his donkey. Every conceivable thing, animate or inanimate, is taxed. Soldiers are at present entirely unpaid, and officers have received nothing for about a year. Few of the civil servants, unless Europeans, have seen salaries for months. Such is the price Egypt has to pay for progress!" The Prince, beat upon Europeanizing his country. The condition of his people is worse than that of the French in 1780. With similar results follow? While his people are starving he has given five of his sons magnificent palaces, and his daughters, too, have princely abodes."

Mr. Murray says that this is his fourth visit to Egypt, and each year he finds the wretchedness greater. The deplorable aspect of the people, who, in many places, have that pinched look which only long continued starvation can give, largely takes away from the pleasure of traveling on the Nile. At Girgeh he found that the children's food was sugar-cane previously sucked by others.

Good Health, and How to Keep It.

There are few subjects, we imagine, around which cluster so many theories as the preservation of health. Let a person pass from one to another in a large company, making a few simple inquiries as to the best way to keep health, and no two in twenty will agree. Each one will give sage reasons for not accepting the theory last propounded. One is positive that half "the ills that flesh is heir to" are the results of improper food. There is much sound sense in that idea; but the trouble is to be sure what is improper food. Each may start from the right point, but the abrupt divergence is amusing, as one advocates beefsteaking. One asserts: "Too much meat is used. It is flabby, and fills the blood with impurities. Pure milk, good white bread and fresh vegetables should constitute the chief part of our food. If this idea," they insist, "could only be accepted and acted upon, the next generation would be a strong, healthy race, pure, blooded, pure-hearted, generous and noble, for the mental qualities are largely influenced by the physical condition as the latter is by the quality of the food that is used."

Another will earnestly argue that a vegetable diet will make pure, watery blood, and insure an indolent, effeminate people. While fresh meat is absolutely essential to a vigorous constitution, to an earnest, energetic character; that a diet largely of salt meat dries the blood and makes those who use it leancadaverous, desponding and dyspeptic.

After thus raising the opinion of a score of people one is inclined to doubt if wisdom is found in the multitude or counsellors. We believe that it is an impossible to make rules for health that will apply to all as it is to find two constitutions exactly alike. "One believeth but; he may eat all things;" and he can: another, who is weak, eateth herbs, and should do so. After reaching what is called the age of discretion, each must to a large extent judge for himself. Medical advice may be desirable, and sometimes indispensable, but physicians are frequently found at a dilemma, and all their skill, founded on what they think well-established theories, is at fault. They will tell a patient, "Use no fresh bread, but use that which is at least twenty-four hours old." The advice is followed, but the result proves disastrous. The stomach rejects such food, because acid and sour. By stealth, as it were, the patient ventures on a piece of well-raised, well-baked, sweet fresh bread, and is comforted. At that one time, if no other, the stomach was not in a state in which stale bread was beneficial, and in defiance of all medical rules craved and secured that which was found to be of great benefit.

Much fresh meat with some constitutions induces fulness of the head and a feverish state of the system, because it makes blood too fast. It should, therefore, be discarded, and a little salt meat or fish, if the appetite craves it, with fresh fruit and vegetables, will be found probably to be just what the system requires.

In truth, with health, as in many other things, each person must be a law unto himself. In acute or minor matters they cannot decide. It is true that what is "one man's meat may be another man's poison," and a little poisoning now and then seems indispensable to teach us our individual physical as well as mental idiosyncrasies. Experience thus gained, if not carried to such excess as to prove too severe a schoolmaster, will be of more value through life than all the doctors in Christendom—with all respect be it spoken—insofar as saving many a long bill at the drug store.

As a general rule, it is not advisable to use hot bread too freely, though the effects produced by its use may often depend more upon the character of the bread than upon its temperature.

Neither salt meat or fish, nor fresh meat or fish, all the time, is advisable —though the salt food may be a trifle more accountant. A judicious mingling of both is the better course. Good, healthy, well-cured pork, well cooked and used discreetly, is not injurious for a strong, healthy person engaged in active or out-door pursuits. But we doubt if it is wise for students to use much, or for sedentary persons, or those at all inclined to humors or eruptive troubles.

It is not safe to allow so large a liberty to young children. They are not capable of forming correct judgment, or governing themselves at all. Parents must do that for them. After they are safely through the teething period it is not necessary to confine them to a milk diet; but they still need their parent's restraining hand to withhold rich food, or sharp, hot condiments. Plain, simple but nourishing food, ripe fruit and berries in their season, are, we think, indispensable for growing children. But their meals should be regular—no lunches between—and never just before retiring. Many a mother will give her very young children rich food—pastry, cake and sauces and condiments of the most indigestible order kind—and tell you her children are healthy, and nothing hurts them. Perhaps the injury is not apparent at first, but it will not be long before headaches, indigestion of the most serious character, or dyspepsia, bred for life, will be the harvest to be reaped from such injudicious and sinful indulgence. —Mrs. H. W. Beecher, in Christian Union.

New Bonnets.

New suggestions are found in the Paris bonnets brought out later in the season. The headdress chips and straws have the inside of the front lined with dark velvet or satin, and edged with a single row of gold braid or else the new rainbow braid that has tinsel threads of many colors to match the rainbow bands; they have no other face trimming. A great many beige-colored chip bonnets are in the late importations. Some of these are trimmed throughout with the same shade, having watered beige ribbon strings, satin or gros grain loops, ostrich tips and darker brown velvet for a baudeau or fillet in front and for facing the brim and curtain. Other beige chips have the crowns covered with pansy-brown velvet, and the brim is faced with the beige chip, and has a wreath of velvet pansies and foliage against the hair. Wild flowers, poppies, bluets and trailing arbutus are artistically painted on these pretty hats. Boyish-looking straw hats with rolled brims and flat crowns, or else round Derby crowns, are also shown for young girls; beside these are the pointed Japanese crowns and the picturesque Tyrolean, with the jaunty sailor hair.—Harper's Bazar.

CULTURED women in Europe never wear jewelry except when in full dress.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Economy means cutting down needless expenses and buying only the actually necessary things, at the same time increasing and developing to the utmost all sources of profitable income.

—Connecticut farmers are hiring their hands for the summer season, at $16 to $20 per month, with board. Eighteen dollars is said to be the average price, but common laborers are very plenty at these figures.

—To restore old kid gloves, make a thick mucilage by boiling a handful of flaxseed; add a little dissolved soap; then, when the mixture cools, with a piece of white flannel wipe the gloves, previously fitted to the hand. Use only enough of the cleaner to take off the dirt, without wetting through the glove.

—To make corn meal pones, take three cupfuls of milk, warmed a little, two and a half cupfuls of yellow Indian meal; one and a half cupfuls of wheat flour; a good pinch of salt; one cupful of good sweet yeast. Set to rise in the morning (if wanted for supper), and when the sponge is light stir in three eggs well beaten, one half cupful of molasses and a small lump of butter melted. Let it stand another hour or two, and bake in gem pans, taking care to grease well and heat before dropping in the batter. Bake in moderate oven for about an hour in a quick oven. As a "set" of gem pans does not bake a sufficient quantity at one time for us, I use my old tea and coffee cups that are "chipped" or with broken handles, and out of use; they turn out in just as pretty a shape, and then only for one baking is necessary.—Rosie Burton in Country Gentleman.

—Agricultural writers are inclined to recommend small farms. As well advocate doing business of any kind on a small scale. Better have a small farm paid for and well managed than to owe for a large one without the means to work it well. But if a farmer is able to do a large farm, and has the ability to manage it, no one need to waste any sympathy on him. Large farms are often poorly farmed, or few would open. The difficulty is not so much with the size of the farm as with the capacity of the farmer. Good farming can be done on a farm as well and more economically on a large farm than on a small one. Teams, implements and farm hands can be used to better advantage on the large farms, for the farmer can afford to have a variety suited to his needs. It is foolish to seek to get a large farm just for the sake of a round, but if the large area is fully utilized then we see no objection to it.—Husbandman.

Inasmuch as every farmer's wife must have the ordering and management of three meals a day for 365 days in the year, and as a good supply of vegetables is necessary for health, to secure a good variety with the advisable changes, we gladly give place to the following suggestion from a farmer's wife, as to what may properly be grown within the limits of a good farmer's garden: Butter beans for early use, early and late beets, early and late cabbage, carrots for soups, celery for fall and winter use, corn planted at intervals for a long season, cucumbers for early use and for pickles, lettuce the whole summer long, musk and watermelons for their seasons, asparagus and pie-plant in permanent beds, onions for the whole year, parsley for flavoring and garnishing, pepper for various purposes, parsnips and salsify for late fall and early spring use, peas sown at intervals so as to make a long season, squashes both summer and winter, spinach for greens and tomatoes for all sorts of uses. This is quite an array, but there is no reason why nearly all of the sorts may not be grown in every garden on the farm, and what a delightful choice the housewife could have in the planning of the endless number of meals.—Detroit Free Press.

The Harrowing Nuisance.

The greatest nuisance that the farmer has to contend with, and one which entails on him a not inconsiderable amount of loss, in time and cash, is the harrowing nuisance. Neighbor A may be a very nice man in many ways; he is sociable, chatty and agreeable. He sends over to see our place and politely asks us to loan him our spade. We do not like to loan him our old, weather-beaten affair, so we let him have our new one. Mr. A promising to return it the next evening, sure, as we thought, as the sponge is light stir in three eggs well beaten, one half cupful of molasses and a small lump of butter melted. Let it stand another hour or two, and bake in gem pans, taking care to grease well and heat before dropping in the batter

The Butters.—Work on the lower part of the new bridge is well under way, under the Superintendence of Mr. L. Matter, of the Smith Bridge Company. The balance of the iron for the bridge arrived yesterday. It will take fully one month to complete the structure, and when completed, we have a bridge of which the county may well be proud.

If you want a fine dress or cheap dress call and examine our stock. We have fine assortment. Dow, Rea & Battara.

Annual.—In the last Annual report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, Hon. Oliver L. Briggs, Commissioner of Schools in Charlevoix County, is highly complimented by counties and Township Treasurers of Charlevoix County in the "Unwritten Township"—a township, right! The Superintendent of Public Instruction of Michigan latter sandy the map of his State.

Road Evpens.—Treasurers for the week ending May 24th, 1878.

A. J. McLeod, Sheriff to Evelia and Daniel Smith, 80 acres in Hayes Valley, $230.16.

Austin C. Newman to Richard Cooper, parcel of land in Charlevoix.—$100

Lewis Gray to Jane Mc and wife, to Ellen J. Eaton, 80 acres in Hayes—$200.

A. Geo F. Allen and wife to Wm. H. Healey, 80 acres in Marion—$220.

The Bayview Retreat.—H. W. Page, President of the "Charlevoix Summer Retreat" writes J. M. Hagan of this place, that a Company has been formed under the State laws, and the papers filed with the Secretary of State and the County Clerk. Mr. Page expects to be in on with some of the Company about the 5th of next month, to close up the matter, and make arrangements to build cottages, etc.

Horton's Bay.—We had an opportunity of stopping off at Olds & Stroud's dock, at Horton's Bay, on Friday, for the first time since those gentlemen have been interested at this point. They have certainly made a great change in the appearance of the locality, and have given it a business aspect which looks exceedingly promising. They have a steam saw mill at the head of the bay, and a quite extensive clearing and neat buildings. In point of harbor and shipping advantage, Horton's Bay is one of the best points on Pine Lake.

Tea for tea for one dollar at See & Washburn's.

A Bad Egg.—Detroit News publishes a biography of Chas. R. Pord, who lived for some time in Elk Rapids, and later in Little Traverse, as Prosecuting Attorney of Emmet county. It seems that he has not improved much in morals since he left this region. From the News it appears that he has deserted his wife and is living with another woman in Detroit, while Mrs Pord is living in the same city in poverty and wretchedness. The picture the News draws of Pord is a pretty dark one, and, even then does not contain a History of his life when learning his trade of cigar making.

Republican County Committee.—The County Committee met on Friday pursuant to call. Messrs. Robert Miller, of Charlevoix, John Stiner, of Evangeline, Hipp, of South Arm, Robinson, of Boyne Valley, and John Ward, of Marion, being present.

The basis of representation for the several Townships was established, as one delegate for every twenty registered voters, and one for every fraction of over half that number.

It was voted that the delegations from the several Townships be required to bring to County Convention a certified copy of the number of registered voters in their respective Townships.

The Committee recommend that at least six days notice be given of any Township caucus called for the purpose of electing delegates to County Conventions, by posting notices in at least three conspicuous places in the Township.

Owing to the shortness of the time before the State Convention, it was decided, if deemed necessary, that the executive committee be authorized to appoint delegates to said convention.

The Bridge.—The pier and turntable of the new bridge is completed, and the workmen are now engaged in putting up the bridge part. Everything so far fully meets the expectations of all. It will be a structure both durable and ornamental.

We note with pleasure that very many of the State papers are mentioning the name of Hon. W. L. Lattimer, of Big Rapids, in connection with the office of Auditor General. We know just enough, personally, of Mr. Lattimer, to know that a better man cannot be found in Michigan, and we endorse him unquantifiedly.

The people of Springvale and neighboring Townships are preparing to celebrate 4 parth of July.

The Baptist Committee are expected here to-morrow, when a formal transfer of the land into their hands will take place.

Capt. Wilson, of the tug Tillson, received a telegram from Sturgeon, Wis., informing him of the expected death of his wife. He left for that place on Sunday.

Farmer's Club.—A Farmer's Club was organized in the Township of Hayes one day last week, with the following officers: President, C. H. Whitford, Vice President, Mrs. Geo. Scott; Secretary, Lorin Hamlin; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Standaville; Treasurer, L. S Webster.

Richard Knight, Esq., of Banks, has been visiting in Wisconsin, and last week returned home. Mr. Knight is a farmer of large and varied experience, and one of the pioneers of Antrim County. He comes home fully convinced that this part of Michigan is grossly superior to any part of Wisconsin that he has seen (the best part of Wisconsin) and the visit across the lake has made Mr. Locker satisfied than ever with Grand Traverse.

Died.—"Old Father Cater" died in Eveline on Friday night last. He was 80 years of age, and had been an active member of the M. E. Church for 56 years. He leaves a wife, with whom he has lived happily for the same number of years. This good old christian gentleman was beloved and honored by a large circle of friends, and is gathered home as a sheaf fully ripened and fit for the harvest. His funeral sermon was preached by Rev. H. H. Whitman, of this place.

From Boyne Falls via Boyne to Charlevoix

From Petoskey to Gaylord.

The River and Harbor bill still hangs fire in the Senate, but Washington advices state that Charlevoix will be all right.

Personal.—Dr. J. H. Morgan and wife, of Grand Rapids, have taken summer quarters in a portion of J. Ingalis's residence. Dr. Morgan came principally for health, but will do all kinds of work in Dentistry very reasonably.

A. M. Morgan, son of Henry Morgan, Esq., of this place, who has been spending a few months in Canada, has returned home.

—A. J. Beardsley, of Boyne, went to Port Huron Thursday on the propeller Fountain City.

—A Texas brother of J. A. Cameron is spending a few days in town.

Don't take our word for it, or believe it, because the paper says so and so, but call at our store and be convinced that we have the best stock of dry goods, clothing, hats, caps, boots, shoes and every thing else to numerous to mention and at the most reasonable prices.

Fox, Rose & Buttars.

Queen Victoria was fifty-nine years of age last Friday, and her birth day was celebrated in pompous style by all loyal Englishmen. At Montreal, Canada, the event was signalized by a successful military parade and sham fight, which drew together 30,000 spectators.

Marine.—Through a misunderstanding of the bells, the propeller Gazelle got aground just above the bridge Saturday, and had to be released by the tug Commodore.

—The propeller Gazelle is 70 feet long, instead of 84, as stated in our description last week.

—The tug Tillson broke her stern-post and was compelled to go to Manistee to repair last week.

—Capt. Tolles is ringing the bells on the tug Tillson during the temporary absence of Capt. Wilson.

—There were 41 clearances from the port of Charlevoix during the month of May, with a tonnage of 5043 tons. There have been 84 clearances since the opening of navigation.

—The schooner W. A. Smith is being repainted and otherwise re-fitted, after which she will take a cargo of potatoes to Bay City.

—Cleared during the week ending: J. A. Johnson, Belle, Bloom, Alaska, schooner Wescott. Now in port: Len Higby, W. A. Smith, Wescott, Radical, Hercules, Minnie Mueller.

—The schooner Wescott made her last round trip between this place and Kenosha in four days and sixteen hours. Captain Reed is justified in bragging about that time.

Carpenter & Bartholomew have an assortment of fine French cambs that are the best we have seen.

The new residence of Hon. John Nicholls is rapidly approaching completion. The painter has commenced his part of the work, and the plasterer will commence his this week. The view from the bay window of this fine residence is of surpassing beauty, overlooking as it does the village the harbor, and the lake beyond.

Real Estate Transfers for the week ending May 31st, 1878:

U. S. to Arthur A. Goss, 80 acres in Eveline.

Joseph Way-an-be-win and wife to H. O. Rose, 80 acres in Hayes—$250.

Louis Otsegau-ma-kee and wife to Simon Otsegau-ma-kee, 40 acres in Hayes, $1.00

Punctuality, accuracy, steadfastness, dispatch and purity are excellent traits. Smith's scientific has them all well developed. When used properly it attends strictly to business and is punctual, accurate, steady and pure. Expansion and dispatch are its best holds. Always full weight. Only use 3-4 as much as of any other brands.

Dexter & Noble, recently sold to Dempsey & Carter, of Manistee, a tract of pine in towns 28 S and 25 S, for which they received $45,000.

The Cincinnati Enquirer, a straight out Democratic organ, is opposed to reopening the presidential contest through the Potter one-sided investigation or otherwise. It says that "to reverse the decision of the electoral commission would not only go behind the returns, but behind the law of the land, and therefore the only object of this resolution must be to make political capital, and for that purpose the policy is a mistaken one."

Men's ambitions grow from year to year. A little ago, Tilden was satisfied to wreck a railroad now he wants to wreck the whole country.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 14th, the House amendments to the bill authorizing citizens of Colorado, Nevada and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes were concurred in, and the bill was passed. Several bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar. The Postoffice Appropriation bill was further amended and passed. Messrs. Dawes and Harris spoke in favor of the bill in regard to the Southern Pacific Railroad. The usual back continued in the House on the investigation resolution of Mr. Potter, the Speaker announcing the regular order to be on securing the demand for the previous question. The Republicans refrained from voting, thus leaving the House without a quorum, as there were but 142 Democrats present, the being necessary to make a quorum. After further blustering on the part of the Republicans, a motion to adjourn was carried by 138 to 104.

In the Senate, on the 15th, the petition of Rebt. H. Ingersoll and others, favoring the repeal of the law prohibiting the transportation of obscene literature through the mails, was reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and referred to the Judiciary Committee. The bill authorizing the publication for sale of an edition of the narrative of the Polaris Expedition was passed. Bills were introduced and referred—to authorize the Postmaster General to place mail facilities on the highway, river or railroad wherever public service requires it, increasing the pay sixty-six dollars a month the pension of certain persons; soldiers and sailors who have lost both arms, or both feet, or the sight of both eyes, in the service of the country. ... In the House, the Senate resolution for the final adjournment of Congress on the 20th of June came up as a question of the highest privilege, and a motion was agreed to. The House resumed its further consideration until the 29th of May. The deadlock on the Potter resolution continued. The highest number of votes cast by the Democrats on the question to secure the previous question being 129, the Republicans still refusing to vote. A call showed 293 members present, but efforts to get a quorum to vote were ineffectual, and the House finally adjourned.

A CONCURRENT resolution was submitted by Mr. Hattier of South Carolina, and referred, in the Senate, on the 16th, providing for a Commission, to consist of two Senators, three members of the House and three officers of the regular army who have served not less than ten years, to whom shall be referred the whole subject of the present organization of the Army, the Commission to assemble as soon as practicable, and to report to the next session of Congress through the President of the United States. Some time pending a resolution to print 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1877 and the reports of the National Quarters and Constitutions was passed. The Postoffice Appropriation bill was then further considered, and Mr. Matthews submitted an amendment, providing for the passage of a substitute, providing for the issuance of treasury notes, when redeemed, to the amount of legal-tender notes outstanding at any time not to exceed $356,000,000, and limiting the aggregate of circulation of national bank notes and legal-tenders of the United States shall be sold for coin at par, and that legal-tender notes shall be received for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports, and interest on the public debt. The debate continued in the House, two or three votes being had without refreshing a quorum. The House adjourned 36 members present, but the Republicans still refrained from voting on the motion to second the previous question on the investigation resolution. The last vote showed 142 Democrats present or within five of a quorum. A motion to adjourn was carried by a vote of 146 to 104.

SEVERAL Pension bills were passed in the Senate, on the 17th. A number of bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar. A resolution was adopted, instructing the Committee on Rules to consider the propriety of admitting the heads of bureaus or of Executive Departments of the Government to the floor of the Senate during the sessions thereof. Adjourned to the 20th. The Senate amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill were non-concurred in by the House. After a protracted struggle and the issuing of a warrant to the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest and bring in such members as were absent without leave, the Democrats succeeded in securing a quorum of their own number, and the previous question on the Potter resolution was ordered—48 to 1. A motion to lay the resolution on the table was then defeated—118 to 145 and the previous question resolution was finally adopted—142 to 2—the Republicans refusing to vote. Messrs. Mills and Stone (Iowa) voted in the negative. During the contest on the previous question motion Mr. Goode explained that he voted after a previous pair with Mr. Lapham, and Mr. Conger made the same statement when a question of Logic whether he (Goode) could take care of known house, and if Mr. Conger responsible. Goode being made that the remarks of the gentleman be taken down, the Speaker decided that the statement of Mr. Conger were not parliamentary. If they were used in an offensive sense; and that a man's honor could not be called in question without allowing him to defend it.

SENATE not in session on the 18th.

In the House, Mr. Stephens asked to be put on record, stating that had he been present when the vote was taken on the 14th that it was on the Potter resolution, on the 17th, and had he not been paired with Mr. Harris he would have voted against the resolution as it stood. A message was reported from the Committee on Elections declaring that there had been no election in the preceding election in the Fifth Congressional District of South Carolina, and therefore (hence) the sitting member (Mackey Richardson (contestant) was entitled to the seat. Committees on Commerce were appointed, and the Pensions and Pension Appropriation bills, and a message that he was also ordered and ordered to be printed. The Army Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, the Speaker stated that he would be absent during the early part of the ensuing week, and a recognition was adopted appointing Mr. Sayler Speaker pro tem. It was arranged that there should be evening sessions for business purposes during all of the following week.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 20th, to reorganize the Court of Claims, and to extend its jurisdiction to take all claims from before Congress; to provide for the army adjudication; to regulate immigration. A bill was passed to amend the 103d Article of War, so as to provide that no person shall be convicted by court-martial for any offense committed more than two years before the issuance of the charges, except in case of desertion or such offense. Mr. Morrill, Chairman of the Finance Committee, spoke in opposition to the bill to repeal the Resumption act, but the bill to place the name of Gen. Hancock on the retired list of the army, with the rank of Major-General, was taken up, and on the question was agreed by Mr. Sargent and adopted—31 to 30. Isaac Jones was appointed Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate. The Indian and Pension Appropriation bills were introduced in the House—the latter by Mr. Kasson, imposing a tax of 1 percent. on State banks; to protect internal and domestic commerce; for taking the Tenth and subsequent censuses; requiring all appointments in the Civil Service to be made from citizens among the Congressional Districts. The Speaker reported, as chairman of the committee of the committee under the Potter resolution to inquire into the alleged frauds in the late Presidential election as follows, Potter, Morrison, Hunton, Springer, Reynolds, Cabell, Blackburn, Cox (Ohio), Hutter, Reed (Me.) and Hiscock.

DOMESTIC.

A FEW mornings ago, Annie Farrell, a servant girl of Chicago, was burned to death in the explosion of a quantity of kerosene, which she was using to kindle the kitchen fire.

THE anniversary meeting of the National Temperance Society opened in Chicago on the 14th. Vice-President E. S. Wells presided. The address of welcome was delivered by Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts, of Chicago. In his address the Corresponding Secretary stated that the liquor problem was becoming more and more a recognized paramount question of practical politics. The Treasurer's report shows receipts for the year from publications, $46,928.62; donations, $7,182.15, making a total of $54,080.75. Expenses for the same period, $54,080.75.

THE Pennsylvania Supreme Court has lately decided that, when an insured person is in such a state of mental incapacity as to be unconscious of the consequences of his acts, suicide by him falls without the provision in his policy in regard to self-slaughter, and does not absolve the insurer from liability.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met in Pittsburgh, on the 16th. In consequence of the illness of Dr. Ellis, of Oakland, Cal., Dr. Morris, of Undepaid, acted as Moderator and preached the opening sermon. Rev. Dr. Francis L. Patton, of Chicago, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year.

THE General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church of North America met in New York City, on the 16th. Rev. A. G. Wylie was elected Moderator, to serve during 1878.

THE General Assembly of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church met at Lebanon, Tenn., on the 16th. Rev. W. D. Rushnell, of California, was elected Moderator for the ensuing year.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South met in Knoxville, Tenn., on the 16th. Rev. Thos. E. Peck, D. D., of Virginia, was elected Moderator for 1878.

THE New York Syndicate, which recently contracted with the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of $50,000,000 of 4½-per-cent. bonds by Jan. 1, 1878, have anticipated their options and subscribed for the entire amount. It was reported in New York, on the 17th, that the parties composing the Syndicate had offered to take $50,000,000 of the 4-per-cents., with the option of $50,000,000 additional.

JEFF DAVIS, a negro murderer, who was to have been hung at Abbeville, S. C., on the 17th, was reapited at the last moment by Gov. Hampton till June 14. The respite was read to the condemned man upon the scaffold, after the knot had been adjusted and prayers finished, and just as he was about to be swung off.

AT Cincinnati, on the 18th, the American Social Science Association met in annual convention under the Presidency of Hon. Rufus Ellis. The session was largely attended. Prof. Pierce, of Harvard College, delivered the opening address.

GREAT excitement prevailed, on the 20th, throughout the western portion of South Carolina, particularly along the ridge of Saddle Mountain. It seems that, on the 18th, rumbling sounds were heard in the bowels of the mountain similar to those which so disturbed the scientists two years ago. Next day the range began to yield, and, on the 20th, the mountain was rent in twain, leaving a chasm 40 feet long and twenty feet wide, and apparently bottomless.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Pennsylvania Republican State Convention was held on the 15th. Gen. Harry M. Hoyt was nominated for Governor; Chas. W. Stone for Lieutenant-Governor; James T. Sherrets for Supreme Judge; Aaron K. Dunkle for Secretary of Internal Affairs. The platform adopted declares opposition to free trade, in whatever form presented; favors protection to home industry "that labor and capital may both be profitably employed;" declares that American commerce should be fostered and home enterprise developed by the National Government; that the public lands should be reserved exclusively for actual settlers; declares opposition to the payment of claims from the National Treasury to those lately engaged in, or sympathizing with, the rebellion; expresses sympathy with the South ern Republicans "in the unequal contest to which they are subjected for civil liberty and the maintenance of their Constitutional privileges," etc., etc.

THE Ohio Legislature adjourned, on the 14th, until next January. Among the bills passed by that body is one allowing women to practice law.

THE Colorado State Democratic Convention will be held at Pueblo on the 15th of July.

MRS. LYDIA SHERMAN, the poisoner, who was serving a life sentence in the Connecticut State Prison, died on the 18th.

THE next Democratic State Convention of Ohio is to be held at Columbus, on the 26th of June.

THE preamble to the Potter Investigation resolution adopted by the National House of Representatives, on the 17th, sets forth the action of the Maryland Legislature in declaring that due effect was not given to the Electoral vote cast by that State last December, by reason of fraudulent returns in the Electoral votes from Florida and Louisiana, and sets forth the affidavit of Melvin Alleging fraud in the State of Florida whereby the choice of the people of that State was annulled, and further sets forth the alleged conspiracy in the State of Louisiana, whereby a like result was brought about in that State, reversing the true vote thereof. The resolution provides for the appointment of a committee of eleven members of the House to inquire into these alleged frauds, and that said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths and to take testimony, and to detail subcommittees with like full authority, and with power to sit in Florida and Louisiana. The resolution offered by Mr. Hale, and which Mr. Potter refused to accept as an amendment, extended the scope of the proposed investigation by including Oregon, Mississippi and other States where frauds or attempts at frauds were alleged to have been committed.

PROF. SYLVESTER F. BAIRD, Assistant Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, has been elected Secretary, in place of Prof. Henry, deceased.

R. E. HOTT, Chairman of the National Greenback Organization Committee for Michigan, has called a State Nominating Convention, to meet at Grand Rapids, on the 5th of June.

FOREIGN.

RIOTS occurred in Blackburn and Burnley, Eng., on the 15th, which required the efforts of the military to stop. At the latter place a large warehouse was burned. The riotous conduct was caused by the refusal of the masters to correspond with the strikers.

THE Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Princess and the Princes of Denmark, visited the American Section of the French Exposition, on the 15th. He said he was greatly pleased.

A RECENT earthquake at Cua, in Venezuela, destroyed much property, and caused the loss of 100 lives.

THE recent drought in the District of Benevenza, in Italy, Guiana, entailed a loss to the planters of between 40,000,000 and 44,000,000.

BERLIN dispatches of the 16th say the Pan-Slavist agitation in Russia was rapidly gaining the ascendency and that Retribution meant war with England.

SERVIA has increased her army of observation from 30,000 men to 50,000. The concentration of a large Turkish force on the frontier is believed in Belgrade to foreshadow hostilities between Servia and Turkey, and has largely stimulated war preparations.

A HERZEGOVINE dispatch announces the resignation of the Servian Ministry.

THE Russian military authorities have completed the Bessarabian section of the Roumanian Parliament to attend any more sittings of that assembly.

IT was reported from Vienna, on the 15th, that Count Schouvaloff had succeeded in contenting the Emperor to his pacific views, and would immediately return to his post in London. It was believed that the meeting of the European Congress was assured, and that the gathering would take place within a fortnight unless further complications arose.

ON the 17th, Gen. Todleben sent a note to the Porte demanding: First, the immediate evacuation of Shumla, Varna and Baiouni; second, the removal of the Turkish camp at Mesdra, and, third, permission to occupy Roupkioi. It was believed the Turks would fight rather than yield to these demands

A CALCUTTA dispatch of the 19th says that the Indian Government had ordered the immediate construction of coast defenses. Madras, Bombay, Rangoon and Calcutta were among the points to be strengthened.

A LONDON telegram of the 19th says that, in proportion as the news from St. Petersburg became peaceful, that from Constantinople grew warlike. The Turks were hard at work strengthening their lines and getting guns in position.

A DISPATCH from Syria, published in London on the 19th, says the Shariff of Mecca had issued an appeal to the faithful in Arabia and throughout Asia Minor, declaring the Sultan a usurper, and calling upon them to fly to the rescue.

DURING a theatrical performance, in Abondeneggier, Italia, on the night of the 15th, the building caught fire, and forty persons were burned to death.

LONDON telegrams of the 20th say that the Government had instructed Lord Loftus, the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg, to demand of the Russian Foreign Office a categorical explanation of the reported armament of privateers in the United States, and also to explain the mission of the Circuits to American waters.

PRINCE MILAN, of Servia, has pardoned the Topola conspirators.

A Word for the Little Ones.

I hate to see children forced to do things that are disagreeable to them, merely for the purpose of making them obey. Where any good end is to be answered it is different. Little ones are often object to what is best for them, and when firmness is necessary people should, of course, be firm. But if a little, powerless creature has a strong fancy, or a great repugnance, a parent or guardian almost has power in ignoring it. Why should your little boy be made to eat the fat of his meat, if he loathes it, or anything, no matter what, that is repulsive to him? It may be necessary to refuse some things at table to children, but seldom, if ever, to force anything upon them.

Why make a child, either girl or boy, miserable by forcing it to wear articles of clothing of which its taste does not approve, or at which other children laugh? I think little girls suffer more from this than from any other one thing. Almost all of us have some such memory. I knew a lady whose childish life was made very unhappy for a year by an obsolete old bag in which she was forced to carry her books to school; and another whose mother forced her to wear some old lace which, though costly, was laughed at by the ignorant children who made her world, who declares that she actually wished herself dead, until that lace was banished from her wardrobe.

If you can afford it, it is wiser to give your boy the particular top or kite he wants, and your girl the doll she covets, or the blue ribbon she admires. And, at any rate, you need not unnecessarily force them to anything from which they shrink, or which makes them unhappy.—Reading (Pa.) Eagle.

CLOTHES-PINS can now be bought for two cents per dozen, and there is no longer any excuse for hanging linen pants on the line by a knot in the leg. —Detroit Free Press.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A SERIOUS accident occurred, on the morning of the 16th, at the new State Capitol. While the men were putting a six-ton ceiling stone in its position on top of the south portico, the beam of the derrick broke, and the stone was thrown onto the cornice and from thence to the steps and landing below. Thomas Almond was quite seriously injured about the neck and head, but not fatally. The injury to the building is estimated at $6,500.

ON the 14th, two soldiers of the Twenty-second Infantry, at Fort Mackinac, deserted, and then broke into the Postoffice, a drug store and a grocery, stealing therefrom goods and money valued at along $200.

THE Michigan State Turnfest is to be held at Adrian, July 4

AT Marquette, a few days ago, Thomas Rule, while suffering from delirium, jumped from the third-story window of the Peer-House, sustaining serious injuries. He was conveyed to the jail where he at his threats from ear to ear.

THE balance of cash in the State Treasury May 4, 1878, was $857,254.51; receipts during the week ending May 11 were $35,480.22; payments during the same time were $14,-656.98; balance in Treasury May 11, 1878, $879,075.75; increase for the week, $21,421.81.

A MAN named Buffard, employed by the Muskegon Boarding Company, was drowned in the Muskegon River, on the 14th, while coupling logs.

AT Holland, on the 15th, a fourteen-year-old boy of William Bosman, while at work on a shingle-mill, was struck by a shingle. His arm was caught in the belt, and he was drawn up around the shaft, striking his head against the frame, scattering his brains over the floor, and fearfully mangling his body.

AT the annual meeting of the State Medical Association in Lansing, on the 16th, there was a lengthy discussion over a proposition to debar all medical graduates of Michigan University from becoming members of the Association, on the ground that they were graduated from an institution recognizing irregular practices. The debate was a lengthy one, and was participated in by a large number of the leading physicians present. The proposition, after having been defeated in all shapes possible for about nine days, was finally lost by a vote of 42 to 61. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Wm. Brodie, of Battle Creek; First Vice-President, Dr. A. F. Wheelan, of Hillsdale; Second Vice-President, Dr. J. R. Thomas, of Bay City; Third Vice-President, Miss U. N. Banks, of Walled Lake; Recording Secretary, Dr. George E. Ranney, of Lansing; Treasurer, Dr. George W. Tuppe, of Detroit.

W. H. STANWOOD, alias Winslow, who swindled many poor people of Detroit by a bogus employment and advertising agency, was convicted, on the 15th, of conspiring to defraud. He has operated extensively on a similar scale in Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, New York and Boston.

THE summaries of the results of the recent frosts in the State, published in the Post and Tribune, of Detroit, on the 17th, were as follows: Frosts have prevailed more or less in nearly every county. The main crops, wheat, corn and grass, are comparatively uninjured. The wheat has an unparalleled growth, and is threatened not with damage by frost, but with undergrowth of stalk. The wheat head, though formed just above the third joint, has not as a rule been exposed to the frost. Corn has escaped without material injury. There is a large area of corn ground planted, but unplanted. There will be much of it planted during the last week in May. The prospects of a large corn crop are about as good as they were May 1. Oats were not injured to any extent. Grass is in the same condition as wheat, but the weather has been more favorable perhaps, and it will be all for the better two weeks in advance of last year. The injury to small fruits has been quite serious, especially to strawberries and grapes, but the apple crop is not much hurt, and we are certain of all the tree fruits—cherries, peaches and plums—have been injured only in part. The most serious and direct injury to farming men and market gardens in the suburbs of the towns and villages of Detroit can count their losses by hundreds of dollars.

CHARLES A. RATHBURN, station agent on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad at Swan Creek Junction, was arrested and arraigned before Justice Comstock the other morning, charged with embezzling the company's funds. In default of bail he was committed for examination. Experts have been investigating his books for some time past. It is alleged that the shortage have been going on for several years past, and aggregate nearly $5,000.

A FEW days ago, Rev. J. Madison Lightfoot, the acknowledged leader of the Detroit colored people, was found dead in bed. He was seventy-two years of age and formerly a slave to Virginia, escaping and coming to Detroit in 1830. He was a leader of the Blackburn riots in 1833, growing out of the recapture of Blackburn and wife, escaped slaves, and was an active agent for many years of the Underground Railroad, by which fugitives from the South were helped to Canada. Of late years he had been a preacher. He was a man of fair education. By lucky real-estate ventures he amassed a small fortune.

The Wife's Mistake.

Edwin was in duty bound to give Angelina something on her birthday, even if they have been four years married. "Angelina," he said one day emphatically, "your birthday and the Widow Flammers' fall on the same day, don't they?" "Yes," said she. "And the Widow Flammers has been very kind to us, and neighborly; nothing could have been more humane when little Edgar was down with the measles, and when you went home to spend a few weeks with your mother she was kind enough to run in every day and see that Jane——" "I know all about it; she was very kind. Indeed, and I don't know how I could ever repay her, not even if I called in $1,000 Treasury notes and lived to be as old as Methuselah," replied Angelina, with a suspicion of sarcasm. "I will," continued Edwin, reflectively, "that times weren't quite so hard; I should like to be in a position to recognize and, in a measure, repay her neighborly kindness with some little testimonial of a friendly nature. I heard her say, the other day, that she so wanted some one would give her a set of jewelry." Here he prudently dropped the subject, but Friday he happened to be out with Angelina, and as he was passing a jewelry-store said artlessly, "Let's step in here and look at jewelry." "The viper!" said Angelina to herself; but nerving herself with an effort she entered the shop. Edwin, in his usual off-hand way, ordered all her books and furniture sent home to her residence, and then, with a sweeping gesture, said: "Angelina, choose a set of jewelry, and I'll pay for it." "Any one—no I do not; I was not on earth yet but till a good while after but the other remembrances of the family still. And my mamma grew up here to be a lovely maiden and got married, but she was not very happy for somebody drank. It is a awful thing to drink. I do not mean for several years, coffee, or lemonade, or milk, or likeris water, or plain water and tea, but many and often with the savages had fat grandfather alone and then he would have come home and mama would have married some other person and would not have been a desolate widow with two girls and one boy.

"The end on this."

The moment the old man had finished reading this story he seized his hat, put it upon his head and rushed into Mrs. Dolf's—the kid glove cleaner—without even stopping to knock at the door, which was such an unusual thing for him to do that Mrs. Dolf started up from her work in the greatest astonishment, dropping the bottle she was busily using in one hand on the floor, where it broke and made the room smell like—well, two hundred pairs of cleaned kid gloves.

"Where does—if you please, ma'am—Mr. Dolf lay his clothes?" asked he.

"Great grief! what has happened? Can it be possible that the old fellow is going to buy some new clothes for himself?" said Mrs. Dolf to herself, and then she answered outloud, "He hasn't bought any for a year or so, Mr. Waste Paper, but when he does buy 'em he goes to Mr. Lucky's, right around the next corner, two blocks down. Lucky's dead now, and 'Cutter & Son' have the place."

"Thank you, ma'am," said Mr. Waste Paper, throwing two bright silver quarters into the lap of little Cheezy, who was sitting on the door-sill, with her kitten in her arms, and hurrying away.

And the old man, dressed in a new gray suit and a nice straw hat, who called that afternoon, first on Mrs Abbeey, the schoolmistress, where he obtained the address of Ruth Sands Morris, who had left school about a year before to live in the Village of Wildrose, not very far away, and then at the "Safeandsure Savings Bank," where he drew out a thousand dollars in brand-new bank notes didn't look much like Mr. Waste Paper, but it was he all the same.

The next morning Mrs. Morris, the pretty widow who lived in the one-and-a-half-story cottage by the woods, in the Village of Wildrose, was hanging up the clothes she had just finished washing, in the back garden, when she heard the big gate over the river ramp dashing along, stopped at Wildrose Station, and left one passenger, quite an old-looking, but nice-looking old man behind it, when it dashed away again.

Grandmother Sands stood behind her lodging like a spike-pin bag, and a young girl, as pretty as her mother, was scattering some corn among the chickens and singing "Up in the Morning Early."

"Dear me," said the widow, taking a clothes-pin from her mouth to say it, "it almost breaks my heart to leave this place. We've been so happy here for the last year."

"They may not find a purchaser for the house," said grandmother.

"Oh! yes they will. They are sure to find one. I wish I had eight hundred dollars, I'd bought it in a moment, then we could have a home forever; but there's no use wishing. I never have more than eight hundred cents at a time nowadays," and she stopped her mouth again with another clothes-pin.

"Mrs. Sand," said a voice directly behind them and they all three looked up at an old man, who had come out of the wood so silently they had never heard his footsteps, leaning over the fence and gazing upon them with a mild, blue eye, "wouldn't it be funny if I gave you the money?"

Grandmother Sands dropped the clothes-pin bag—the pretty widow nearly choked herself with the clothes-pin she had been sucking—and the pretty daughter, her song suddenly ended, stood with one hand held out toward the chickens and her mouth wide open.

"Don't you know me, Sallie?" said the old man, "I should have known you anywhere though I haven't seen you for many long, long years," and he slowly turned his black eye and then both eyes upon her, and opened the gate and came in.

"Husband!" shrieked the grandmother.

"Father!" cried the daughter.

"Grandfather! Hurrah!" shouted Ruth.—Imagined Eulogy, in Detroit Free Press.

Employer and Employed.

Whenever either employer or employed forgets that there is a community of interest between the two, both are sufferers. This is true of all kinds of business in which the two classes come in contact. The employer who has no other interest in it than to get out of them all that their strength will permit them to do, will soon find that his employes will become equally as selfish, and that not only the least possible amount of labor that will prevent their discharge will be done, but that what is done will be imperfectly performed, and the employer who has no other interest than to get his money, is a detriment to any man who employs him. In some establishments, and on some farms, a stranger would be unable to tell, from the language or actions of the help, that they were employers. Whenever they speak of the affairs of their employer, they don't speak of them as if they were responsible, and that they had no responsibility whatever, but their language conveys the idea that they feel their own responsibility, and that the success or failure of the business is a matter of anxiety to them and their actions accord with their words. Nine out of ten employers greatly appreciate such a manifestation of interest, and it really seems to lighten the burden which always necessarily rests upon a business man. If an employe has such an interest in the affairs of his employer, there is no mistaking it. It will show itself on any conceivable occasion; and if he has been so unfortunate as to find a man who does not appreciate his services, they will not long go unrewarded, for others will see them, and be glad to avail themselves of them.

It is, no doubt, the case with human Nature, that it is selfish in all of its relations of life, and perhaps the great majority of men are too apt to slight their duties, instead of doing everything upon honor, and performing services for others as they would perform the same service for themselves; but there are men, and a great many of them, who are strictly conscientious in the performance of their duties as employes, and it is such men who will always win.—Western Rural.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A train on the Georgia Northwestern Railroad was checked just in time, lately, for a colored man to snatch from beneath the pilot a little child on the track.

—The life of a valuable dog, owned by a Boston gentleman, was recently saved by making an incision in its stomach and removing a rubber-ball it had swallowed.

—A little son of Mr. Haas, living in Lexington, Minn., while playing with his sister, became enraged at her, and, seizing an ax, cut off both her feet, from the effects of which she died.

—A colored man, named Anderson, has been arrested, at London, Ont., charged with having placed a mixture of salt and paris green in a pasture-field, whereby several cows were poisoned.

—A woman-tramp and her daughter called at a house in Pittsburgh, recently, and demanded dinner. After deliberately partaking of the repast the woman coolly asked for a set of earrings or other jewelry that the family might have to spare.

—In Merriman, N. H., "two female tramps entered a house while the family were out, and, without ceremony, built into the best room and went to bed. The first the family knew of this was in the morning, when the two women got up, dressed, entered the dining-room and demanded breakfast."

—Waterford, N. Y., has the champion absent-minded young woman. She was recently married, and a few days after had her furniture insured, but in the next day appeared before the agent and wanted the policy changed, explaining that she had forgotten that she was married, and had just had herself and man inserted in the policy.

—The barn of Van Meter, of Kentucky, was recently burned by spontaneous combustion. A pile of horse manure had been heavily covered with straw, and an explosion occurred under the straw pile, the result of spontaneous combustion, which was instantly followed by a blaze in the straw. The stables were rapidly consumed, together with two young bulls and two horses.

—Somebody down in Biddeford, Me., vouches for the following story: "A lady was discussing the light of stars, when she fell, dislocating her shoulder. She landed on a large dog at the foot of the stairs, which rose in a fright and threw her into a hogshead of soap, where she fell upon a hot stove, and would doubtless have been seriously burned but a man who happened to be in the room suddenly pulled her away, in doing which he brought her arm back into place again."

Person's Wonderful Memory.

Few men have had such a wonderful memory as Richard Porson, the eminent Greek scholar of the last century. His power of recalling whatever he had read astonished even his friends, but his love of intoxicants led him to excesses which eventually destroyed his extraordinary memory.

Being one day in the shop of Priestly, the bookseller, a gentleman came in and asked for a particular edition of Demosthenes. Priestly did not possess it, and as the gentleman seemed a good deal disappointed, Porson inquired if he wanted to consult any particular page.

The gentleman mentioned a number of which he was in search, when Porson opened the Aldine edition of Demosthenes, and, after turning over a few leaves, put his finger on the passage.

On another occasion he happened to be in a stage-coach; presently there entered into it a young graduate with two ladies. This young gentleman endeavored to make himself seem very learned. He presently quoting a Greek passage, which he said was from Euripides.

The Greek scholar, who was dozing at the other end of the coach, awoke at the familiar sound, and drawing a copy of Euripides from the folds of his cloak, politely asked him to favor him with the passage. The unfortunate graduate again failed, the ladies tittered greatly.

"Catch me!" said he, "if I ever quote Greek in a coach again."

Stung by the laughter of his fellow-passengers, he said, "I recollect now, sir. I perfectly recollect that the passage is in Æschylus."

His inexorable tormentor, always again in the capacious folds of his cloak, produced a copy of Æschylus, and again asked him to favor him with the passage.

The boiling point was now reached. "Stop! stop!" shouted he to the coachman. "Let me out! There is a man inside who has got the whole Bodleian library in his pocket!"

On another occasion, calling upon a friend, Person found him reading Tyrtæus. Being asked, casually, the meaning of some word, he immediately repeated the context.

"But how do you know that it was this passage I was reading," asked his friend.

"Because," replied Person, "the word only occurs twice in Thucydides —once on the right-hand page in the edition which you are now using, and once on the left. I observed on which side you looked, and accordingly I knew to which passage you referred."

Once, when in the house of Dr. Burney, at Hammersmith, with some friends, examining some old newspapers which detailed the execution of Charles I., he came across various paragraphs thought by some of them to have been overlooked by Rapin and Hume; but Porson instantly repeated a long passage from Rapin, in which these circumstances were all recounted.

Upon one occasion he undertook to learn, by heart, the entire contents of the Morning Chronicle in a week, and he used to say he could repeat "Roderick Random" from beginning to end. —Chamber's Journal.

Cheapness.

In these hard times how great is the inducement, if not the necessity, to get everything cheaply, and how uniform is the experience that cheapness means inefficiency! Occasionally, indeed, through the misfortunes of our fellows, we are enabled to secure property of various kinds at a price far below its value, and so demoralized have we become by the pressure of financial distress, which tends to selfishness and not to generosity as some would have us believe, that we feel a little twinge of exultation that personal profit has accrued to us through our neighbors' loss! But general cheapness is a very different thing, and we are led to conclude that a cheap article of any kind is a very undesirable one, and only to be accepted through necessity.

The cost of anything, and consequently its value, is measured by two things, quality of material and the labor employed to make it. These in turn may be superior or inferior. In consequence of the demand for cheap articles our stores are full of inferior goods. Furniture made of unseasoned wood and hastily glued together; musical instruments that are mere varnished cases with the imitation of keys, strings and reeds for interior mechanism; silverware with tarnishing coat of shining gloss; jewelry that is for look upon, but is hopelessly tarnished by use; clothing that presents a fair exterior, but that rips and frays and loses shape when worn; gloves that gape at every seam at the first wearing; these and innumerable other calamity-concerning instances of inferiority impress upon us the fact that, ordinarily, cheap things are the dearest.

Excellence and cheapness cannot go together, and we would save ourselves much annoyance and disappointment by recognizing and remembering the fact. The house which the contractor builds too cheaply will invariably have weak joints, doors that will not shrink at the corners, plastering that will drop off, and paint that will crack. How can it be otherwise? The builder is not going to make a present of good work and good materials to his patron; cheap work will be given for cheap pay. The tailor is not going to put good material and skilled labor in the suit of clothes which looks as good as the best, but is sold at a price far below what is asked for the genuine article. It cannot be done, and it should not be expected; but when we are compelled to buy cheaply should philosophically make up their minds to bear the consequences that must follow such purchases.

The individual may learn to estimate rightly the consequences of cheapness, and intelligently make choice for himself with full knowledge of the inevitable results. In public affairs it is different, and here the effort after cheapness becomes a danger of great magnitude. The outcry of the people against heavy taxation is in danger of resulting in our employing cheap teachers for our schools, cheap officials for our public service, putting up cheap public buildings, doing business on cheap methods, and the effect cannot but be most disastrous. For public use cheapness is of inferior quality. We must have excellence if we would have satisfactory service, and for excellence we must be willing to pay. It is one of the duties of the citizen who desires to see public money used to the best advantage and not squandered to insist that nothing cheap shall be purchased with public money, whether of public service or public property. Only by requiring excellence, and paying a fair price for it, can the public escape the loss and disappointment that inferiority always necessarily accompanies cheapness.—Chicago Post.

Attacked by Wolves.

About ten o'clock last Saturday night, as Mr. Miner, of the Town of Langeln, Benton County, was driving from his own house to Mr. Morrill's, having with him his wife and three children, he was attacked by five large timber wolves. The fierce beasts sprang at the horses, and when Mr. Miner struck at the nearest one with his whip it made a leap to get to him, but struck against the wagon-box. At this moment Mr. Miner's dog bravely attacked the wolf, and was set upon by the whole pack and killed, and almost devoured. This gave Mr. Miner an opportunity to whip up his horse, and make off, which he did at a full gallop, calling out loudly for help. His cries attracted the attention of Mr. Jocelyn and family, who came to the rescue, and the wolves were driven off. But for the fortunate interference of the dog the result might have been much more serious. An attack of this kind, by wolves, is almost without precedent in this part of the State, and it must be that the animals were driven to it by ravenous hunger.—St. Cloud (Minn.) Journal.

THE SENTINEL.

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH
Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 4, 1878.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 31, 1878.

DEAR SENTINEL:

The Chinaman still remains one of the most vital questions with which society has to deal here in New York, and he is with us, as with every one else, a puzzler. Despite his taciturnity and his stolidity, Hinkhoos he is always getting himself or others in, more or less, of trouble. For instance, here are three full blooded celestials who, according to the confessions of their race, engineer a wash house over on the East side. They had some misunderstanding with a customer about a week ago, owing to delay in finishing up the latter's work. The customer, by way of making his dissatisfaction known, overturned everything movable in the place, and wound up his explanation by breaking a burning lamp over the head of the pig tailed lot. Then when one of the dazed washermen had got enough of his breath and his senses to start after a policeman the irate patron would not permit him but, dodging out of the door, locked it on the outside and left the luckless Confucians caged with a fire which the oil from the broken lamp had started, which it seemed were on for reinforcements. Returning shortly after with several loon companions the lunatic outsider aided his followers to break all the windows of the place and bombard the ill-fated unwitting firemen who were still struggling with the flames, with caged cats, dog-tail cats, ragged knickers and other assorted missiles. At this juncture their happened an occurrence about as rare as total eclipses of the sun. A policeman actually came along and arrested all concerned. Arrived at the station house the cultivated inspired of the Celestials if they wished to make a charge against their adversary. No answer being returned, the question was repeated till it was evident that none of the three spoke English enough to say what was necessary.

The richest customs now in the city station is a genius. He stopped quietly around after all the fuss and battery against his will much annoyed fashion, alleging that while he was in their shop they had sought to stay him with a flat iron. The charge was duly entered, and the unfortunate washerman after having suffered thus grievously in mind, body and estate, were remanded for trial and led speechless away, while their assailants walked off with his friends, the pet pig of injured innocence. At last accounts the poor heathen were still trying to figure out the situation and to get the hang of the Mellen man's law.

It is hardly possible that our venerable philanthropist, Peter Cooper, will want to run for president again. Not only did he find his following rather scanty in 1876, but now he is being dragged over the coals in a law suit for libel, brought by Wallace P. Groom wants $50,000, which is the amount, in his opinion, to which his feelings and character were damaged by Mr. Cooper's accusation that he had misappropriated certain of the funds belonging to the Greenback party. The suit will probably amount to nothing beyond showing what a queer set of politicians the worthy old gentleman fell among and how they handled him.

And now through the stir and bustle of the new World's fair comes a truly echo from the Centennial. For two years the publication of the Official Report on "Group 25" has been enlarged, thus rendering possible the controversy which has raged between the two most prominent manufacturers of pianos, which instruments, as may be remembered, formed the most important class in this group. Finally, however, the long considered document has made its appearance and by it the contest is made as much a thing of the past as the war of the Roses.

The judges, after their long sitting, are unanimous and emphatic in their verdict not only that the Steinway piano was first and best in all respects, but that there was a wide distance between it and its next lower competitor. The inevitable conclusion upon reading these reports is that there have been considerable misstatement to use no harder language—in various trials of the pianos, since the Fall of 1876.

A number of weeks ago I wrote of the 61 days that had gushed in upon New York in one general spring against the tenements. The good work still goes lovingly on. One of the stock purchases has just been tried before a jury, convicted and sentenced, and seven others are now waiting their turn at the bar of justice. More than three the Grand Jury have been instructed to find a true bill against our kid gloved Board of Health, who, as it quite recently have treated public opinion with the most contemptuous indifference. There is hope on the wards, that before the present crusade spends itself, the city will be in a good measure purified from an atmospheric contamination which is not only intensely disagreeable, but which has for years had no unimportant share in making up our death rate.

All through the eight years that have passed since the Harvard-Oxford race on the Thames, we have felt a little sore over the crushing defeat of the American oarsmen. Twice since some crumbs of comfort were obtainable from the result of the little contest on the Schuylkill in Centennial times, but that was not enough to heal our wounded pride, so on the 22d inst. our Columbia College boys sailed on the City of Chester to try once more what can be done in recapturing our lost laurels. Whether they will succeed or not remains to be seen, the subject only to become of few hours will all come out in due time.

Since our last letter the Meadow Market was opened in Hoboken, we are told under favorable auspices. To date the number of stalls occupied has greatly diminished, and now there are only about half a dozen in operation, four acres and look like a mammoth bird cage, the sparrows having taken possession of it for the winter, or their own and built their nests on every perch in the trees which support the arched roof over head. The birds are a great nuisance to the market men. They first tried to keep them out of the building, but they are now more numerous than ever. The birds in fact, leave the land stalls, and will probably occupy the stalls before it is finally established between Thirty [illegible] City the birds may remain. Otherwise it can be made to pay a good return on $150,000 and a yearly income for the company.

Grant Will Settle It.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

The prosecution of the Democratic conspirators, under the guise of an investigation, to the retail of crooked Big Horn out of office, will serve to alarm that still secretive band of the conspirators over Tilden, and other echo cries of "no fair play" and the substance of peace will be raised in [illegible]. The fact was conspired [illegible], and who has the nerve and skill to expose it. Again Grant has in possession and power on earth to [illegible] while there lives in the last quarter of the 19th, and the most remarkable man in America. There is universal sentiment at the North and at the South, that, in a long struggle or a short struggle, Gen. Grant will stamp out revolution, anarchy, Communism, and every form that treason and passion may take on to destroy the Government. He is the iron man of our time and country to whom the law and order people will appeal with one accord, without regard to former discussion or an estimate of his capacity in other political offices, whenever it shall be necessary to apply force in the suppression of revolution,—in the certainty that in every case the destruction of the treasonable element will be certain and complete.

Grant's nomination and election are undoubtedly in the hands of the Democrats, for the same conditions that would prompt the one would surely lead to the other. Grant was first elected by the Republicans, to put down "Andrejohnsonism." He was elected the second time by Democrats some 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 Republicans probably voted for Greely in 1872, but fully half a million Democrats voted for Grant, and as many more Democrats remained away from the polls to make his election sure. There was no means of expression then, but the conservative dread of a disturbance of trade under such a weak or erratic administration as Greeley's was likely to be was enough to turn the tide in Grant's favor. How much more certain, then, that the conservative classes will again rally around Grant when there is a threat of Mexicanization of the republic, when not merely the welfare, but the peace of the country is threatened, and when greater disaster than the war of the rebellion can only be averted by repeating popular confidence and full power in the man who, of all living Americans, is best fitted to overcome and punish treason and revolution.

A Boy's Description of the Bee.

One day Billy, wich had been a reading in that poetery about the bee and the ant, and such things, kep a sayin it over til we cd got sick of hearin it, so one time wen he come in the dren room and had not with my father he said, William, that insecktz has past a tolably quiet life, and is a dean as we as cude be expeckted, it is very good of your master to send you to inquire so often, but it is a nusance of the same, so I am about to dishucthis bulletin, wich will save you any further trubble. Wen he sid that my father pict up a paper wate and made like he was a goin to fling it, but Billy he improved the shinin our by dashing thru the store into the passidge.

I hate bees cos some fokes wich writes is of ways a crackin' em up, like they was the muse industrias, and orilly, and peinable, and clever things in of this werd, and little boys and girls ot to be like 'em. But wat if little boys and girls wude sting like thay does?

The hunny wich is take out of bee hives is sweet, but frute cake is the stuf for me. Bees was, wich by mouth-er ness we sine the baby's frox, is nothing but just hunny comb, but not like you cownd your head with.

The way the bees makes wax is this way. A bee goes to a flour and rides in it, and the dust sticks to his legs and makes him feel uncomfortable, and wen he cant stan it no longer, he goes back to the hive, and wen he gits in there the ist purter bee says "hoots! Thats the matter with you?" The outlook on the whole was never better in the South, Southwest and Northwest." One conservative says "cotton in several States "much of the corn is up and ready for cultivation;" that it is receiving from all sections favorable growing intelligence. "Crops never better; outlook all that could be desired;" and continues by saying: "We may reiterate what we have before stated, that never in the history of the West have we had so advanced a season of uniformly mild weather; so early a season for planting. This our 'Record' has shown from week to week. The weather is now generally favorable for farm work. Let us hope it may continue, and at the close of the season's labors all may unite in one grand harvest-home such as the West has never yet seen."

Our recent advices from the South, both written and printed, are generally favorable. Georgia and Texas report more promising crops than ever before, while Virginias (old and West) and the Carolinas are making notable progress in the line of increased agricultural production. Georgia, Alabama and several other cotton-growing States have wisely increased their acreage of corn, wheat, etc. The planters are giving more attention to mixed husbandry, instead of depending mainly upon cotton, and the result will be an increase of prosperity and independence. Arkansas and the Indian Territory promise unusually large yields of wheat, cotton and tobacco, with increased attention to other crops.

Turning from the South to the great agricultural States of the North, notably New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and we find the great staples in a most promising condition, with a larger acreage than for many years. The wheat crop never looked better at this season, and as the acreage is far greater than ever before the yield must be immense, unless the grain is seriously attacked by the Hessian fly or suffers from rust or some other calamity. Our accounts from Central and Western New York are especially favorable in regard to wheat and other staples, and the farmers are hopeful of an abundant yield of the leading products. Both Ohio and Pennsylvania will, according to present indications, produce a greater abundance of cereals than ever before, while other crops, including fruit, are most promising. New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland will probably yield a greater amount of fruit than has been expected, and in sections where the crop has been diminished in quantity the quality will be improved. The reports in regard to the prospects of other staples in these States are generally encouraging.

From New England—a region so generally regarded by people of more favored localities as bleak, sterile and too rocky and hilly for profitable cultivation—we have favorable accounts of the season and crops. Advices as late as the 6th instant say the recent heavy rain, which continued for days, caused no serious damage. A Boston agricultural journal of the 4th says: "The season is at least two weeks earlier than usual, and the grass and vegetation generally is that much in advance of the average of years. So far the promise of the year is uncommonly good." Our letters from Vermont, New Hampshire and other parts of New England all report the season forward, and the farmers preparing to plant more largely of corn and other crops than for many years. The hay crop will be large, and more wheat, rye and tobacco will be grown than in any previous season for years. An abundant yield of apples is expected, and other fruits promise well.

From other parts of the continent—as Dakota, Colorado and California in the West, and Canada on the North—we also have favorable reports as to the season and prospects of growing crops. Colorado and Dakota are cultivating much greater areas than ever before, the increase being principally in wheat and corn, of which there will be a large aggregate production. The reports from California and Oregon are very favorable in regard to the condition and prospects of the staple crops of the Pacific region, and especially wheat, of which there is promise of an immense surplus for export. From Canada also, particularly the Province of Ontario, the accounts of the wheat crop are unusually promising, for more than an average, and the area of the acreage is greater than ever before. The aggregate production must be large, if not augmented.

In conclusion, if America was before justly called the granary of the world, it promises to be more fully entitled to the claim and name after the coming harvest, for if nothing unforeseen occurs meantime its production of cereals will far exceed any ever known in its history. And if the threatened European war occurs, America will be looked to to supply the "staff of life" to the millions who will thereby become consumers instead of producers of the most important of all our staples. True, the wheat crop is not beyond danger of serious injury from various causes—notably rust and the Hessian fly, both which have attacked it in some localities—yet the probability is that, with such an immense area devoted to the great cereal, the aggregate yield will be unprecedented in the history of a country remarkable for its agricultural productions. But if one crop fails, or is diminished materially from any cause, others are likely to yield abundantly, so that our people will not want for the necessaries of life, while the present indications are that there will be a large surplus of all the leading staples for exportation. N. Y. World.

Poisoned Spears.

IS an interesting series of letters to the London Field from the New Hebrides, a group of islands north of Australia belonging to the Paraguan group, whose inhabitants are extremely savage and think nothing of making a meal of a missionary. Mr. L. Layard describes the dreaded poisoned spears of these Islanders, made with long carved points of human bones. These points are formed from the leg bones of either friends or enemies, a high bone being split into four points, while a shin bone suffices for only two. The natives are very particular about the selection of them. They say that the bone of a person under twenty is too weak and spongy; from twenty to forty they are at their best. After that age they become too brittle. Some spears have as many as 200 or 250 points and splinters fastened on them—three or four vastly exceeding the others in size, being in fact the main points. A fragment of one of these remaining in the wound is almost sure to produce fatal results, as the cellular appearances of the bone is, of course, impregnated with the virus of the body that has decayed around it. They are used for arrows also, and barbed for the purpose of being fixed in the wound long enough for the poison to mingle with the blood.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Hoe cabbage plants when the dew is on, but beans when they are dry.

—Some dooryards look as though struck by a Western tornado which had proved too much for it.

—Bees require no outlay for wintering in shape of food. They cost only care. They often make very profitable returns. More attention should be given to the production of honey.

—A good start is the main thing on the farm in the spring. The ground well plowed and thoroughly harrowed; good seed, planted in time, and then followed closely with the harrow, and there is a good start.—Iowa State Register.

—Some varieties of flowers, the Jackson Sun instance, thrive best if the roots draw what water they need from the saucer, instead of being forced to take what is poured on from above, and to be sprinkled should be laid down on the side.—Detroit Free Press.

—Horse Radish.—A little horse-radish taken with meat is a stimulant to digestion and by no means unwholesome. It is also excellent in small quantities for cattle, cut up fine and mixed with potatoes or a little Indian meal. It will create an appetite and will keep off disease in animals.

—Fine Egg Pudding.—One quart sweet milk, five eggs, five tablespoonfuls flour (slightly rounded), butter size of a small walnut; bake a few moments in a moderate oven, stirring a little at first to prevent the flour going to the bottom; should be very light and delicate when done; to be eaten with sugar and cream. Flavored as you like.

—Very good cheese is made of potatoes in Saxony. The potatoes are boiled, reduced to pulp, salted and mixed with sour milk, when all is kneaded together and left for a few days. After this the substance is again kneaded and placed in little baskets to dry. This cheese will keep and is not likely to become inhabited.—Prairie Farmer.

—Milwaukee Pudding.—One cup molasses, three-fourths cup suet, or butter size of an egg, one cup sweet milk, one cup flour, one even teaspoon soda, one cup raisins, one long teaspoon cinnamon, two eggs, one heaping teaspoon cloves; steam two hours; can be made some time before needed, and then put into a steamer and steamed when required for use.

—Fried Potatoes with Eggs.—Slice cold boiled potatoes and fry in good butter until brown; have ready one or two eggs and stir into them just as you dish them for table. Do not leave them a moment after the eggs are put in, as if they harden they are not half so nice. One egg is enough for three or four persons, unless they are very fond of potatoes; if they are very plenty and put in two.—Rural Home.

—The little attention is paid to the egg plant. When once a taste for it is acquired, it has a delicious flavor and soon becomes a favorite dish. It should be cultivated in every man's garden. So soon as the fruit is as large as a man's fist, it is ready for use. Slice one half an inch thick, parboil, and then fry in butter. To grow the egg plant the soil cannot be too rich, and must be warm. The plants should be raised in hot-bed beds, and carefully taken up so they can be transplanted without disturbing the roots too much, as they are difficult to transplant successfully. They are easily killed by the frost or cold than the bean or tomato. After them when the weather is dry, and after the water has settled cover with dry dirt, so the surface will not bake. They should not be transplanted until there is a certainty of continuous warm weather. The fruit is large and delicious when served up right.—Iowa State Register.

Why Cows Hold Up Their Milk.

The bag or udder is divided into four parts, entirely distinct from each other except as they are held together by membranous ligaments. The milk in each bag is collected into tubes, which, like the roots of a tree, are all connected into one just above the teat, the milk entering that tunnel-shaped organ by a single channel. At the upper end of the teat the walls of this channel are contracted and the contraction is surrounded by a band of circular fibers. The will of the cow can operate on this band, contracting or expanding it at pleasure, making it operate like a valve. At the junction of each small tube with a larger one is a similar contraction band, also under the control of the will. Ordinarily these bands are contracted (as in the neck of the bag) to the small to good conveying size cases out of ten when the land is fall plowed, and the surface thoroughly stirred in the spring, when dry, and planted without replowing. A better crop of corn will be realized than if the crop be planted on fresh plowed land, if the plowing be done while the land is wet. This is especially true if trash or manure has been plowed under in the fall.

It is a mistake to suppose that a soil should be very soft to reach the best results in tillage; on the other hand it should be moderately compact, and in the same time it be in a pulverable state. Thus all that is necessary is to work the surface into a good state of tilth, and there is little danger but a good crop of corn will result if only the plowing of the crop be conscientiously accomplished.

When, however, corn is planted on fall plowing, we have found it an excellent plan at the first cultivation to use narrow bull-tongue shares on the cultivator, next the corn, setting them so they will move the earth to the full depth of the plowing. These throw no earth laterally, but open the soil so the young roots of corn have mellow earth to work in.

It also tends to aerate the soil, thus fixing the gases that are always being generated in a soil open to the air. When the corn is thus plowed both ways, these narrow teeth may be moved to the outside of the cultivator and the broader ones used next the corn. Thus the whole soil is kept mellow to the full depth of the plowing.

The object of cultivation is, first, to destroy weeds, second, to keep the surface of the soil mellow. If this mellow surface, or, rather, a surface of finely-pulverized soil, be maintained through the growing season, the roots are kept in a state of constant activity, the leaves are of a deep green, and the crop is kept growing right along. If, on the other hand, the surface becomes crusted or sodden from being waterlogged, the pluses cease growing and the leaves that something is wrong. This shows conclusively that it is the action of the air in the pores of the soil that conduces, as our principal means, to continued health in the crop.

When the ground is entirely and closely shaded, as with a crop of grass and grain, this crusting of the soil does not take place, neither does it become sodden, and hence, as a rule, the absolute necessity of stirring the surface of so-called hoed crops, until they attain such growth as to enable them to pretty well shade the ground.—Prairie Farmer.

An Elephant Fight in Virginia.

A rather exciting scene occurred while the circus was traveling en route to London Corners. The two lead elephants, Chief, Princess, Mary and Bismarck, were the actors and actresses in the "fight difficult." It had been apparent to Mr. King (their keeper) and several older attaches of the show that trouble was brewing, for the two fasters, Mary and Princess (African) were on one side, and Bismarck and Princess (African) on the other. The denouement occurred while crossing the South Anna River, on a bridge; the elephants crossing in the following order: Princess first, then second, Bismarck third and Chief bringing up the rear. Just as the squad, the elephants not being allowed to come on the bridge at the same time as horses, etc., is apparent, the weakness, their weight being twenty tons. About midway of the bridge Chief became impatient, and, despite the efforts of Mr. King, with hook and spear, made a fearful onslaught on Bismarck; and such was its force that he was knocked head foremost into the river. As the water was very deep, he sustained no injury from the fall, but when he began to use the surface he emitted carefully blast that it was heard for miles up and down the river. And then the scrimmage began in earnest. Scrubadie. The elephants on the other side rushed into the river to the assistance of Bismarck. Chief ran off the end of the bridge and into the river, where he renewed the contest with redoubled fury. Emperor (an Indian animal) got into a disconsolate state at the time that Chief did, and then a trunk-to-trunk contest commenced which beggars description. The fight right on top of Bismarck, who did not come to the surface for ten or fifteen seconds. At this juncture Baldjak, Whoodah and Caliph came up, and the fight became general. Bismarck gradually worked himself up to the shore, but the banks being muddy, and he being weak, he sank in the mud completely bogged and perfectly helpless. Just then Mary, together with Princess, who had been passive spectators of the trouble, sounded their horns and pitched in. They made short work of it, and soon put the rest to flight. They then, with almost humane intelligence, turned their attention to old Bismarck. Mary put her trunk under his trunk, and, with the assistance of Princess, succeeded in getting him into a sitting posture. Mr. John F. Robinson, jr., with all the managers, canvassers, grooms, performers and musicians, with rope, and block, and tackle, came on the scene at this time, and after two hours' hard work succeeded in getting old Bismarck on dry land. Chief and Mary were found together with chains, and although they looked fierce at each other, they could not hurt themselves or any of the herd. In this manner they were marched into town. Chief was conquered, but not subdued, and the old fire still flashed from his eyes. Mr. Robinson says that more punishment was necessary to make him perfectly tractable. He ordered him to be taken down into a thicket, where, being properly secured, he was beaten until he cried enough—that is, blew his horn like a good fellow. He then walked to his quarters as meek as the historical little lamb that followed Mary.—Piedmont Virginian.

The heirs of Brigham Young brought a restraining suit too late, and the executors have restored to the Church property of the estate valued at from $500,000 to $750,000. An examination of the books has been going on since Young's death, and it shows that he was indebt to the Church about $1,000,000, which is almost the full value of his property.

WHENEVER a man uses the personal pronoun "I" too much, it is always safe to discount his stories about 50 per cent. The pronoun "you" may be connected with small ventures and insignificant achievements, but the pronoun "I" is never used except in the description of immense ventures and very heroic deeds.—*N. Y. The Art of Prolonging Life.

People generally desire long life and good health. Sickness and premature death are almost always due to violations of the laws that govern our physical being, or to accidents or diseases hereditarily transmitted. If men knew better they would do better; but how are they to avoid an evil that they know not of? While efforts are made through the public schools to give each child a somewhat common English education, yet the children are permitted to grow up and enter upon the responsible duties of active life, profoundly ignorant of the structure of their own bodies, and the laws of physical being upon which their health and lives depend. They are not taught to read and recommend with arithmetic, grammar, and geography, by teachers who, in many instances, have never studied physiology and hygiene. They are taught to locate the mountains and trace the rivers of foreign countries, but are never taught to locate the vital organs and glands of their own bodies, or trace the veins, arteries, and nerves, in their various ramifications. They are instructed in the flow of the tides, and the courses of the ocean currents, and the philosophy of winds and storms, but they have no correct conception of the relation of these facts upon their health of breathing pure or impure air, nor has their attention ever been called to the importance of keeping their bodies clean and healthy by regular bathing. The criminality of minds awaked to learning becomes apparent when we consider that the masses, ignorantly forfeiting the laws of health, bring upon themselves sickness, suffering and death, that might otherwise be avoided. In this condition of things we welcome into being any work that is calculated to impart to the masses a knowledge of the structure of their own bodies, the laws of health, and the importance of observing those laws. We find Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser to be just such a work. It is a plain, logical and pathological, and the major part of it should be converted into a text-book for the use of common schools. Its careful study will enable the healthy to preserve their health, and the sickly to regain health. Every parent should read it, and as their children become of proper age instruct them in the all-important truths it contains. Were this done, much suffering and premature death would be prevented, and many a youth saved from a life of shame and licentiousness. The book contains nearly one thousand pages, is profusely illustrated with colored plates and wood-engravings, and can be had by addressing R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary and Invalid's Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Price, post-paid, $1.50.—United Brethren Aid Journal.

NO Receiving Sheds Built in the Fall. Every machine is well finished and examined with arithmetic, grammar, and geography, by teachers who, in many instances, have never studied physiology and hygiene. They are taught to locate the mountains and trace the rivers of foreign countries, but are never taught to locate the vital organs and glands of their own bodies, or trace the veins, arteries, and nerves, in their various ramifications. They are instructed in the flow of the tides, and the courses of the ocean currents, and the philosophy of winds and storms, but they have no correct conception of the relation of these facts upon their health of breathing pure or impure air, nor has their attention ever been called to the importance of keeping their bodies clean and healthy by regular bathing. The criminality of minds awaked to learning becomes apparent when we consider that the masses, ignorantly forfeiting the laws of health, bring upon themselves sickness, suffering and death, that might otherwise be avoided. In this condition of things we welcome into being any work that is calculated to impart to the masses a knowledge of the structure of their own bodies, the laws of health, and the importance of observing those laws. We find Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser to be just such a work. It is a plain, logical and pathological, and the major part of it should be converted into a text-book for the use of common schools. Its careful study will enable the healthy to preserve their health, and the sickly to regain health. Every parent should read it, and as their children become of proper age instruct them in the all-important truths it contains. Were this done, much suffering and premature death would be prevented, and many a youth saved from a life of shame and licentiousness. The book contains nearly one thousand pages, is profusely illustrated with colored plates and wood-engravings, and can be had by addressing R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary and Invalid's Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y. Price, post-paid, $1.50.—United Brethren Aid Journal.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—The French papers announce the death, in his Prison, at New York, of "Williams Tweed."

—The estate of Oakes Ames, who died several years ago, is still unsettled. When he died he was supposed to be worth several million dollars, but it is now doubtful whether the estate will meet the debts.

—A brother of the late Vice-President Wilson opens the door for visitors to the United States Senate Chamber, and a brother of Senator Blaine, who only slightly resembles him, folds papers in the document room.

—Wine Spencer, the defaulter, ran away from Chicago, he left a locked box supposed to contain much treasure. This mysterious depository was broken open in court the other day, and was found to contain "a bag" of Capt. William Morgan's celebrated exposure of Masonry, undated, but yellow with age." And then his creditors felt better.—N. Y. Graphic.

—"Gen. O. O. Howard," a Portland (Ore.) correspondent of the Boston Journal writes, "is marvellously popular with the people. He is known as the praying General. He is one of the most earnest Christian men on the coast. His religious flag is never struck; that floats everywhere in church and Christian association, in the Sunday-Schools, in the odd, wayside later of missions, he is foremost. On board the steamer he was the life of the company; cheery, genial, amiable; he made friends with all. On Sunday he arranged Divine service, led the singing and aided the preacher in his part. His personal bravery and courage is admitted by his enemies."

—Senator Withers, of Virginia, displayed wonderful nerve during a recent operation, when the surgeons had to cut into the inside of the pupil of the eye and remove from it a particle of diseased matter. He absolutely refused to take morphine or any other anesthetic, and, lying on a sofa with his head propped up to allow the surgeons to reach his eye readily, submitted himself to the shock with entire composure. Withers not only did not put utter a sound under the knife, but did not once wince or give any other evidence of feeling pain. The exhibition of nerve and power of will was wonderful, and the best results followed. The operation was more successful than if the patient had been subjected to the influence of anesthetics.

—Tom Placide's widow died at Tom's River, N. J., recently, aged eighty-three. Fifty-three years ago Tom Placide, then with her, but Mary Ann Knight, who was ten years his senior, did not encourage his suit and married another man. In 1868 her old lover met her, then a widow, renewed the courtship of forty years before, and this time was successful. After the marriage they went to Tom's River to live, he having retired from the stage. Their home was a beautiful place, and they are said to have lived very happily together. In July last Placide committed suicide by shooting himself. He had suffered protracted agony from a cancer in his mouth, and, in a letter written just before the deed, he explained that he could endure no more. Mrs. Placide was prostrated by his death, and her health thereafter steadily declined.

The Increased Suicide Rate.

That there is an alarming increase in the number of suicides in this country is evident on reading the records as published in the daily papers. Every day the dispatches chronicle the suicide of from three to five persons, whose prominence or the circumstances of whose death make the announcement of general interest. During one month of the present year the weekly average of such suicides was over twenty, and possibly the average has been nearly as great for all the months. The reported cases take in all grades of society, and include young people as well as old; people in good health, as well as people disappointed and sick.

A correspondent of the Inter-Ocean expresses his opinion that the increase in the suicide rate is owing to the publication of the particulars of every case of suicide, and the leaving aside of notoriety, the methods of the suicide. This correspondent asks that all suicide items be omitted, at least from the weekly edition of the Inter-Ocean.

This approximates to a theory of suicides that has many advocates. As a rule, the despondent boy takes a melancholy satisfaction in doing something that will make him sick, and picture the remorse and grief of his family when they see him dead. As to death, so it is argued that a person suffering from disease or worried by disappointment and trouble, turns to a sport that promises relief from all, and to an act that, while it stops all responsibilities, arouses the sympathy of friends and appeals to the charity of enemies.

Has a man been wronged, he imagines that self-destruction in some way makes the fact prominent, and that his self-immolation makes the public the instrument for reproaching and punishing those who have wronged him. A man who thinks he has not been understood or appreciated is apt to fancy that his sudden taking off is a mysterious way will open the eyes of the world to the talent and ability that was allowed to perish with him, and, animated by this thought, he takes his revenge on the public by an act which he hopes will tear their hearts with remorse.

The letters left by many suicides show that in some such spirit they contemplated self-destruction. Others write as though they were simply tired of life, and disgusted with their own infirmities. Others, again, write not at all, but carry all close as to motive with them into the beyond. While the public looks upon suicide as cowardly, it is easy for the person who has determined on suicide to convince himself that his act is in some sense heroic. Certain it is that much thinking on suicide makes men mad, and in seeking causes for the increased rate of self-destruction, we may find the principal one in the fact that with the change in public opinion toward the suicide has come a disposition to dwell more on the romantic and peculiar features of suicide cases.

In the old time the suicide was counted in the list of outcasts. The act itself received the severest condemnation of the Church, and was looked upon with horror by the people. There was, in public print and common conversation no attempt to conceal and no tendency to justify the act by an array of causes, or by enlarging upon the qualities and traits of the deceased. There was no encouragement to dwell on the subject in secret or public, but popular sentiment, custom and tradition all tended to drive from respectful men's minds away from the subject. The sentiment in the churches, in addition to the Church itself, and the feeling among the people at large, all have changed, there is now more sympathy for the act, and more consideration for the person who commits suicide, than formerly, and the means of directing public thought to such occurrences having greatly increased, are most without scruple. In this change of public sentiment we may find one reason for the increase in the suicide rate.

Supplementary to this is the fact that suicides find apologists and defenders in the press, and sensational writers. An article is published, written years ago by John M. Binckley (who is said to have committed suicide a few days since), which is in effect a strong plea for charitable judgment on the same. If Mr. Binckley did commit suicide, he applied to the disappointments of his career the reasoning common to diseased minds, and the article written in former years about that subject, and been dwelling on the subject, and that he had taken the first step in the direction of danger.

Many seek causes for the numerous suicides in the hard times and incident privations. As a rule, however, the suicide not only does not encourage his self-immolation by another man. In 1868 her old lover met her, then a widow, renewed the courtship of forty years before, and this time was successful. After the marriage they went to Tom's River to live, he having retired from the stage. Their home was a beautiful place, and they are said to have lived very happily together. In July last Placide committed suicide by shooting himself. He had suffered protracted agony from a cancer in his mouth, and, in a letter written just before the deed, he explained that he could endure no more. Mrs. Placide was prostrated by his death, and her health thereafter steadily declined.

A Curious Wager.

A few evenings since a party was given at the house of one of our prominent citizens. One of the guests was a most charming and accomplished lady, who had worn the weeds of widowhood two years; there was a gentleman but recently come to our town, a native of Hartford, Conn. The amusements of the evening were varied and thoroughly enjoyable; but the chief attraction proved, by a delightful sweepstake, to be the game of hasino. Several had tried their skill at the board, with varying fortunes, when the gentleman and the lady referred to supra approached the table, and the gentleman suggested to his partner that they should try their skill at the pins. The challenge was accepted, and the lady playfully proposed that they play for a wager. The gentleman gallantly assented, and asked her to name the stake. Seeing her confusion, the host jokingly said:

"He hand against yours."

The lady's confusion was turning to leave the table, when the gentleman, after a moment's thought, said:

"Shall I hand for yours, if I win; or at your disposal for any young lady of respectability (her consent being first obtained), if I lose."

A proposition so gallant the lady could not resist, for the gentleman was a prime, whose weight will him. Excitement now was high—all other amusements being suspended, as the company gathered round the bassiro board. The lady was reputed skillful with the dance, but the gentleman knew nothing about the game, yet possessed an admirable coolness, which was almost an offset for inexperience. The lady led off, getting a "king strike," and the gentleman followed, missing little bassino, and making a "muff" with the third ball. A laughing sensation was indulged in when the score for first prize was announced, "lady, 45, and a bassino spare gentleman, minus 18." Nothing daunted, Sam continued the play, followed with equal spirit by the fair antagonist, until near the close of the game, after the seventh play, when the score stood, "gentleman, 215; lady, 164." The excitement among the guests was now intense; and the lady, flushed and trembling, played very badly her last three plays, losing heavily. At the close of the tenth and last play the score stood, "lady, 158; gentleman, 385," said to be the best score ever made in town. A decorous applause followed the announcement, and the lady, covered with confusion and the presence of mind enough to acknowledge the low bow of Sam, who murmured a few sentences expressive of joy. The hostess now advanced, took the feebly resisting hand of the fair widow and placed in that of the winning gentleman. And we hear that the latter ceremony is to be repeated with more solemnity, some few months hence, the notice of which will be published in the Register. The mace used S——— begged of his host, saying that he would treasure it carefully for a perpetual reminder of that happy evening.—Franklin (Mass.) Register.

The two soldiers who deserted from Fort Mackinac on the night of the 13th inst, and who were suspected of having committed the burglaries of the post-office and two stores in that village the same night, were arrested on a train of cars near Petoskey the second day after leaving Mackinac. After landing on the south shore of the Straits they went directly through the woods until they struck the railroad near Petoskey, and got aboard a train of cars going south. Telegrams having been sent ahead of them, they were recognized and tutor mation immediately given to their pursuers, Mr. Thomas Marshall, of Mackinac and the Sheriff of Petoskey, who secured them. They were handcuffed and taken to a hotel at Petoskey for the night and locked up in separate rooms. During the night one of them opened a window and threw himself out, without injury. He made his way to a blacksmith shop, broke in the window, and got himself free from the handcuffs, and then went to the railroad office, broke into it, and smashed about $25 in money, and fled to the woods. He was discovered and arrested the next day about eight miles from Petoskey. The money taken from the postoffice and store at Mackinac, and the clothing taken by them, were found on their persons. Mr Marshall took his prisoner safely to Mackinac, and he has been committed to jail for trial at the next session of the Circuit Court.

In point of both law and fact there has been no contraction of the currency. The amount authorized by law is to-day as great as it ever was. And in a quarter of a century currency has never been procurable on easier terms or lower rates of interest. The prominent fact is the lack of demand for it, the scarcity of borrowers who are ready to run the risk of its profitable use, or who know where they can use it with a reasonable certainty of profit. When business becomes sufficiently active by reason of profit, there will be money enough ready to embark in it. But while the chief demand is a struggle to get it for debt paying, it is correspondingly diverted from its other uses

STATE OF MICHIGAN Thirteenth Judicial Circuit In Chancery.

Suit pending in the Circuit Court for the [illegible] of Charlevoix, at the [illegible] of Charlevoix, in said county, on the 19th day of May A. D. 1878.

Present, Hon. Reuben Hatch, Jr. Circuit Judge.

Richmond National Bank, Complainant, vs.

Henry C. Morden and Agnes A. Morden, Defendants.

In this cause it appearing from affidavit on file that the defendants, Henry C. Morden and Agnes A. Morden are not residents of this State, but are residents of Denver, in the county of Weld and State of Indiana. On motion of Sidney A. Fletcher, complainant's solicitor, it is ordered that the appearance of said non-resident defendants, and each of them be entered herein within three months from the date of this order, and in case of their appearance they cause their answer to the Bill of Complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on them of a copy of said bill and notice of this order; and in default thereof said Bill may be taken as confessed by said non-resident defendants; and it is further ordered that within twenty days the complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that said publication be continued therein once each week for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendants at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for their appearance.

R. Hatch, Jr.
Circuit Judge.

R. W. SMITH, of Toledo, W. C. Newman, and the editor of this paper, went fishing Wednesday at Mill Creek, and each brought home a respectable string of trout. Mr. Smith was the champion angler of the occasion.

PERSONS and health-seeking parties from various of the leading cities are expected here this summer in large numbers. Charlevoix is already becoming famous as a watering place.

THE Nationals have nominated Major H S Smith, commonly known as "Secretary Smith" for Governor. He will want a dose of his own Saleratus to settle his stomach next fall.

THE schooner Rhoener has been anchored off Hog Island for some time, fishing, and throwing offal into the lake, contrary to law. The authorities at Beaver Island lately took the matter up, and fined the owner $25, and cost.

J. A. BARTRAM has a fine looking place on Pine Lake, and will undoubtedly continue to improve it. He keeps a store and does a general trading business. The steamer Gazelle stops regularly at this point.

THE Charlevoix Township Board have voted to prohibit persons driving across the new bridge faster than a walk, under a penalty of $15 for each offence. Notices to this effect will be posted upon the bridge.

Burton Lights.—The Charlevoix Township Board have instructed the Highway Commissioner to secure red and white lights to be placed upon the bridge for the guidance of vessel captains. The arrangements of the lights will be made known at the proper time

THE contract for planking the channel side of the bridge pier was let by the Town Board to John Nichols, for the sum of $30. The work was done in a very substantial manner by Mr. Nichols's workmen.

BERNARD HOSIE, Esq., of Harrisville, Deputy Grand Master of the Orange Institution, left here on Thursday for New York City, to attend the Supreme Grand Lodge of I. O. L. which convenes on the 13th. Mr. Burns tells us that there will be a general demonstration of all the lodges in this region at Barnard on the 12th of July.

THE BRIDGE.—The iron work of the new bridge has been all set up, and the structure is now always the plank and the completion of the approaches to be ready for use. It is the embodiment of modern thrift, and "resent a very fine appearance.

TROUT.—The party of five Fort Wayne gentlemen who arrived here a week ago Sunday, left for home on Sunday with "dead loads" of trout packed in ice. They caught during their stay up the Jordan 1200 trout, weighing in the aggregate over 100 pounds.

THE success of the "Charlevoix Summer Resort" enterprise is largely due to the energetic efforts of H. W. Page on the part of the "Resorters" and J. Milo Eaton on the part of our Committee. A little less energy on the part of those gentlemen would under all the circumstances have resulted less satisfactorily to all concerned.

—On the arrival of the propeller Fountain City Friday evening, the propeller Gazelle took Capt. Gibson for a short ride in Pine Lake. The Captain pronounces her a "very speedy boat."

BURGLARY.—On Monday night some unknown person pried open a back window of Stockman's hardware store, entered, and robbed the money drawer of its contents—about $10. On the same night some person entered Dr. Lewis' drug store in the same manner, and took about $1 80

BOOTS and shoes as cheap as ever at See & Washburn's.

DROWNED.—Joseph Shores, a somewhat aged resident of Norwood Township, was drowned at Burns' mill pond, in Marion, on Thursday. It appears he was fishing, and was taken with a fit and fell into the water. Several other persons were standing by, but were apparently unable to save him

HIRAM CARTER, of Norwood, recently returned from a visit to his old home in Plattsburg, N. Y. The Plattsburg Republican has the following:

HIRAM CARTER, Esq., brother of our esteemed citizen, Samuel Carter, of this village, has been on a visit to his friends in this section for a few weeks past. His home is in Norwood, Charlevoix Co., Mich., for which place he left on Wednesday last. Uncle Hiram, as he is familiarly called is one of the oldest masons in the State, having been made a Master in 1822, Royal Arch Mason in 1824, and Knight Templar in 1826. To all of these bodies he was admitted while a resident of this village in the years named. Though age has left its traces on him, the love, interest and zeal of his youth for those institutions has not abated in the least.

THE RESORT.

A Fixed Reality—The Transfer Made.

On Tuesday last following named gentlemen connected with the "Charlevoix Summer Resort Association" arrived in town

H. W. Page, J. L. Sanding, T. S. Cobb, and Judge H. G. Wells—Kalamazoo.

John Corbin and N. W. W. Smith—Grand Rapids.

E. H. Anderson and Wm. Lauer—Fort Wayne, Ind.

The purpose of their visit was to close the negotiations between the Association and the people of Charlevoix, for the location of the Association in this Township.

The proposed twenty-five acres lying at the foot of Pine Lake, and connecting with the bayou of Round Lake was surveyed, thoroughly examined, and the bond for a deed duly made out and placed in the hands of the committee.

Five members of the Association have already pledged themselves to erect cottages this season, and more than that number will undoubtedly be erected. It is the purpose of the Association to fence and improve the grounds at an early day

The gentlemen composing the Committee all express themselves highly pleased with the result. On the day of their visit everything combined to render Nature even more beautiful than it ever went. The tall, verdant foliage on two sides of the Resort, the broad, glittering Pine Lake, the gently undulating hills in the distance, made a picture which, to eyes unaccustomed to such natural beauty, was truly fascinating, and could not fail to charm.

PATHMASTER Chipman has commenced plowing and scraping the hill at the north end of the bridge to grade up to the approaches of the new bridge. As the floor of the new structure stands about five feet above the level of the old one, considerable grading will be necessary.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate, on the 21st, Mr. Ferry stated that he was instructed by a majority of the Finance Committee to report back without amendment the House bill forbidding the further reinvestment of United States legal-tender notes, and to recommend its passage. Several other bills were reported from committees and placed on the calendar, among which was the House bill for the relief of settlers on public lands under the Preemption laws. A new Conference Committee was appointed on the Military Academy Appropriation bill. The resolution to the bill to place the name of Gen. Grant on the third list, providing for the addition of the name of Gen. Grant, was reported, and passed 32 to 29. An amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Hon. Shields on the pension list at a pension of $125 a month, was offered as an amendment to the bill, rejected 22 to 33. The question being then on the passage of the bill, it was rejected—yeas, 30; nays, 34—and a motion to reconsider the vote was made. The Legislative Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole of the House, and several amendments were agreed to, involving the labor question and the policy of a reduction of the Army, and the use as a police force to protect laborers throughout the country in their right to work in opposition to the power and demands of strikers.

A BILL was passed in the Senate, on the 22d, for the relief of settlers on public lands under the Re-emption law, giving to those settlers who had been on public lands two or three years the benefit of that time upon entering their claims so as to be under the Homestead law. Mr. Lamar spoke in favor of the Texas Pacific Railroad bill. The Conference Report on the Indian Appropriation bill was agreed to. Mr. Harr son offered, as a substitute for the pending resolution in the House extending the Potter investigation, a resolution that Messrs. Sandidge, declaring that it was the intention of the House, through such investigation to stand or be arrested to annul the decision of the Presidential question as made by the Forty-fourth Congress; but several members declined to vote. On motion of Mr. Randall, the pending question being raised, Mr. Harrison withdrew the resolution. Mr. Wilber then offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the President to inform the House what, if any, authorities to any State where there may be any controversy existing as to the result of a recent election, have been issued by the Executive Department of the United States, and the number of cavalry regiments from and to which, and the number of infantry companies from and to which, and to correspond with the increase of the Army for the enforcement of the laws and maintaining the domestic tranquility. The Army Appropriation bill was then taken up, and, pending action thereon, the House adjourned.

A BILL was reported in the Senate, on the 24th, to amend the law relating to Presidential elections and regulating the counting of votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions relative thereto. The bill to provide for the entry of articles imported for exhibition by societies established for the encouragement of the arts and sciences was passed. Several amendments were agreed to to the bill providing for a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia. Bills were passed in the House—repealing that portion of the act which deprived of their pensions four March, 1865, to the 18th, by reason of their being in the Civil Service, shall be paid their pensions for that time; repealing the law which provided that no claim for a pension not prosecuted to successful issue within five years from the date of filing the same shall be admitted without record of the evidence from the War and Navy Departments; increasing to seventy-two dollars a month pensions paid to soldiers and sailors who have lost both arms, both legs or the sight of both eyes; granting a pension of $250 a month to every pensioner who has had a leg amputated at the hip joint, causing it unlawful for any attorney or claim agent to demand or receive for his services in a pension case a greater sum than ten dollars. Several proposed amendments to the Army Appropriation bill were disposed of in Committee of the Whole.

IN the Senate, on the 25th, the concurrent resolution was passed, declaring that the provisions of the existing Chinese treaty between and the United States, allowing unrestricted immigration from China, ought not to be modified so as to subserve the best interests of both countries, and requiring the abrogation of the Executive to the subject. The House bill to prevent the publication of notices of inventions under the Homestead, Preemption and Timber Culture acts was passed. The House bill to appropriate to the payment of certain claims for supplies furnished to the Union forces in the State of Tennessee during the rebellion was considered in Committee of the Whole and passed. The Army Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole, and several proposed amendments were disposed of.

A BILL was introduced and referred to the Senate, on the 27th, to repeal the existing taxes on circulation and deposits of national banks, and to impose taxes on dividends in excess of 5 per cent. A resolution was agreed to requesting of the President copies of all correspondence, not already submitted, and of all memoranda and minutes in possession of the Government relating to the selection of Mr. Maurice Delfosse as one of the Commissioners under the Treaty of Washington on the Fisheries question. After the further consideration of the bill to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, a motion to take up the bill to forbid the further reinvestment of legal-tender notes was agreed to—26 to 28. Several bills were introduced and referred to the House, among which were the following: To prohibit the sale of United States securities; to establish a permanent sinking fund; to reorganize and aid the higher education of the colored race in the District of Columbia; to aid the several states; to establish a National University at Washington. The Army Appropriation bill was further amended in Committee of the Whole and finally passed. The yeas and nays on the amendment increasing the limitation of the strength of the army from 20,000 to 27,000 were—yeas, 116; nays, 129. Mr. Garfield changed from yea to nay, so that he might move to reconsider, the vote then being 117 to 129. Messrs. Garfield and Hewitt rose simultaneously to move to reconsider, and the latter was recognized by the Speaker who claimed that the Chair was bound by all parliamentary practice to recognize the gentleman in charge of the bill. A motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was finally carried—121 to 114—thus limiting the strength of the army at 20,000 men. Messrs. Patterson, Williams (Mich.), Wigginton and all the Republican members except Rogers voted with the Democrats in favor of the amendment increasing the limit to 27,000 men.

DOMESTIC.

THE United States Treasury Department has discontinued the payment of standard silver dollars for Treasury notes, at the New York Sub-Treasury, for the reason that the silver thus loaned, instead of going into general circulation, is returned to it in the payment of custom dues, the exporter thus saving the gold premium. For similar reasons the amount of silver issued at Baltimore, for Treasury notes, is limited to $5 at a single payment.

Pleasing the Children.

Some little girls, the youngest class of a private school in an adjoining city, following the custom of their elders, determined, a few days ago, to hold a fair for the benefit of some orphans. The matter had been fully and properly canvassed, price of admission (five cents) agreed upon, fancy-work commenced, contributions solicited, lotteries arranged, and all seemed to be working nicely after the manner of grown folks. The question where the fair was to be held was the only one unsettled, and this for a while bid fair to be an obstacle that would block the wheels of progress and turn into an utter failure an enterprise that had been commenced with such high hopes of abundant success. At whose house shall the fair be held? There was sickness at one, company at another; one's mother was too busy and another's thought it would be too much trouble. At last a little tot, the tiniest of the class, said, "I think you can have it at our house. My mother says nothing is too much trouble when it is mother's self that is the sufferer, and she will be glad to have you come."

Thus spoke the child of a wise woman. We want no further evidence of her wisdom than the testimony of her child, given in that simple, artless way. We wish we knew her, that we might do her respect in person as we do now in spirit. Brighter than any jewels in Victoria's crown shines her motherhood. For her example in the tenderness and refinement of her children she deserves the thanks of the world. But do we not see, in the effect of the teaching of this mother in a more lowly station, the same wise treatment that produces the same effect on her children and all around her? Is there a mother of any one of those little school girls who will not feel a reproof when she hears her child say, "Marie's mother says that it is too much trouble to do for her children." If there is, we are sorry for her and for her children and her children's children.

Home influence is in this country too often unappreciated. Parents are too much occupied with the labor of accumulating worldly wealth to attend to the home instruction of their children. They are entirely willing to give all the money needed for the Christian institutions in school or college, but cannot spend the time to give them personal attention.

The education of children should begin with their earliest infancy. Lessons of obedience, respect, confidence and love should be taught from the moment they can comprehend, and be taught in a spirit of confidence and love. When your child believes in you and knows that you are willing to do every possible thing you consider for his good; when he knows that there is never been occasion for doubt, you have laid a foundation for an education that will be excellent, even though that child never sees the inside of a schoolhouse. What greater confidence can be expressed than that by the child who said, "It is time for my mother says so, and when she says a thing is so, it is whether it is so or not." Not very correctly put, perhaps—but we all know what it means—that if mother says a thing is so it will prove to be so, no matter how improbable it may look at present.

This topic furnishes a good opportunity to introduce an argument in favor of the education of women, but we will not improve it further than to say that, in our opinion, if liberal education can be given only to a part of the family, the girls should have it. The influence of an educated mother in a household can scarcely be overrated. She is with the children every hour of their infancy, just when the bent that shall grow to be the tree is susceptible of being bent. And words spoken in a proper spirit, at a proper time, are seeds sown that will bear rich fruit in after years.—Rural New Yorker.

BY-AND-BY.

Be quiet, restless heart! The long light lies
In pleasure or lingering sunshine on the hill;
The locust-leaved scarlet, twittering so he flies,
Makes silence more musical still.

The shadows deeper grow, and in the woods
You get a bright sweetness holds in tree;
An odor faint of pea unblossomed buds—
Be like, dear heart, to thee!

Far distant in the soft, overdrawn deep,
Where the lustrous bounds the nether world,
Great ships lie sunkissed, like brooding birds asleep,
Let with white sails loose furled.

In peace the day is ended, and the night
Builds as doth a veil upon the sea;
Along its breast come with swift-whipped flight
The gray mists, silently.

O restless heart, how Nature speaks! Her power
How long it takes to bring thee to her!
The infinite peace of her most fruitful hour!
How soft her influence!

Time hath she for her storms to sweep the main!
To rock the treetops with her winds of wrath;
To bring forth fragrance in the summer rain;
And time for snow she hath!

So, dear, for all thy restlessness, be still!
She keeps sweet times and seasons. In her
Is bid for thee all passion's subtle fires
To round thy womanhood.

Grace, then! and in this dewy twilight, move
As one who hears the music of the spheres!
This gift for all I holds still the Eternal Love—
That's endless by-and-by.

—Sunday Afternoon for June.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE.

A day in June, 1993, and one of the loveliest early summer days the world ever beheld—a cloudless sky, golden, bright sunshine, soft fragrant air, joyously exultant songs of birds, faint rustling murmurs of leaves and plashings of fountains, delicately green grass, lingering violets and budding roses.

In the lawn in front of the elegant mansion of Leon Fishback, Esq., a party of young people are playing "Follow-follow-follow-me"—a game somewhat resembling in their mothers and grandmothers tell them) an old game called "puss in the corner," played a quarter of a century or more ago, only in "Follow-follow" players, instead of beckoning to each other, beckon to a group of metallic balls, around which they run in a ring or circle, and he or she who proves to have most magnetic force the balls follow with a metallic rush, while the remainder of the players rush as wildly in their efforts to secure the place left vacant by the flying ones.

At this moment the balls are rolling pell-mell, helter-skelter, knocking against each other with a pleasant ringing sound, after a pretty fair-haired maiden, whose little feet, clad in slippers of gleaming with silver and gold, flash in the sunshine.

Satin-thin Turkish trowserkets as she springs lightly over the green sward amid the cooing laughter and laughter—no one shouts loudly in this refined twentieth century—of her merry companions.

Never fear, my dear—I mean Miss Rearsley—that such a misfortune as that shall ever occur, accompanied though you should chance to be at the very side of the shooter. Edison is at this moment perfecting an instrument that begins to deliver its messages to a marvelously loud voice, which increases in volume as the wire is carried forward, until it reaches the most distant point it is intended to reach, thus maintaining an even tone all along the route. How glorious all these delicious inventions are!" he continues, with a glow of enthusiasm, "and what humdrum times our ancestors must have lived without them! Why, they are the very life of a family! There's the phonograph, for instance—but I beg pardon; you are looking bored. I cannot expect you to take as much interest in these scientific subjects as I do. Is not Reginald coming this way?"

"He is not," answers Miss Laura, demurely; "he is still bidding Bella's hand and treasure adieu at the other end of the house. He was positive we'd meet in the days we went blackberrying together some ten years ago and forgive me again, but upon my word, I cannot help asking you, impelled as I am by some mysterious power, why have you never married?"

A blush rises to her cheek, but she looks up in his face calmly, and replies: "I don't remember the blackberry episodes, and I have remained unmarried because I vowed when a young girl never to marry unless convinced that I was the first and only love of the man whose wife I became."

"Laura, I have never loved another."

Mr. Fishback, you forget my old friend Teresa, the sister of the girl to whom your brother Reginald is now making love on the lawn."

"Good heavens! Laura, how mistaken you are!"

"Twas with her you looked for blackberries. I never knew you to find any—not with me, sir."

"Laura, how blind you were! I sought her society only to be near you. I declare, upon my word and honor, I lingered by her side for hours and hours in the hope that you would join us for a moment or two during the time, and when you did, in that moment or two was concentrated the joy of the whole day. You were so proud, so cold, so reserved, I did not dare to approach you save through your friend; and—"

"And you did not bury yourself in seclusion for two years after she jilted you and married Frank Huntington?" she asks, as he pauses.

"Great heavens! how preposterous! Laura, I swear—"

But, as he is about to swear, enter a procession of small nephews and nieces and attendant friends, the leader of which carries an old-looking box.

"See, uncle!" the bright-eyed little fellow calls out as he approaches. "I found this old phonograph on the top shelf of your closet, where I was looking for your fish line to play horse with, and it talks like everything."

With this he begins to turn the metal crank, and a voice—a somewhat shrill young voice, the voice of Teresa, sister of Bella—shallow friend of Laura Fishback—begins to speak:

"Yes, Leon, my own, I will grant your impassioned prayer, and breathe the words you long to hear into the magical casket, and then, when you are lonely or inclined to doubt me, jealous of some stranger-cause in and said:

"Old fellow, I've got a bet of ten dollars on your head!"

The saloonist fell all over the top of his bead, found the sentence, and looked for a further explanation from the stranger whose coat at the elbows seemed bound to secure ventilation.

"The case is this," continued the man, "I bet my friend B that you are a well-read man. To prove it, I have come to ask you if you know what Damon did when there was every reason to doubt that Pythias would return. If you can tell me, my lager you can jog your memory a little."

He pushed a glass across the counter, but the saloonkeeper seemed to be hunting for something down among the kegs.

"It's only a trifle—small wager—but the principle is what I want to establish," remarked the man, as he anxiously shoved the glass around.

"I expect so," came from down among the kegs.

"Damon and Pythias were chums, you know. When Damon was put off his chin, Pythias pulled down his vest, and vice versa. While I can drinking you can ponder over my original query."

Shust so," replied a voice, as the kegs were rolled about.

"If Damon had the headache," continued the man, trying to work the pump proposition above the bar, "Pythias had a soreeye as an office. If Pythias said he would take sugar in his, Damon sweetened up with New Orleans molasses. All this you know, of course, but what did Damon do when Pythias did not return?"

"I schall now show you what he did?" replied the saloonist, as he rose up with a metallic spiggot in his hand. "Mishter Baldeau did not hurry up Damon vhanks arount der barshuttse, und——"

The stranger got out, and holding the door from the outside he looked through the glass and said:

"I am now convinced that you never read a line of Shakespeare! While Damon was searching under the bar, Pythias drew and drank three glasses of beer!"

The saloonist smiled, laid away his spiggot, and as he good-naturedly pulled open the door he called to the stranger at the curb-stone:

"When Baldeau vhas drawing dot pump into der schlop keg!"

A tramper passed over the vag. He turned pale, showed his teeth, and as he started for the wood-yard opposite he replied:

"Hangest if he didn't—Pythias wants rest!"—Detroit Free Press.

A most deplorable accident occurred, Monday morning, at the residence of Mr. Charles Cottrell, an engineer, living at No. 818 Exchange street, in this city. Preparations were in progress for removal to another house, but at the time of the tragedy Mr. Cottrell was down town. Mrs. Cottrell was making a call at the house of a neighbor, and the only inmates of the house were Mrs. Elizabeth Dowler, who was a widowed sister of Mrs. Cottrell, and Charlie and Gracie Cottrell, aged respectively six and four years. The children were in Mrs. Dowler's room, which was on the second floor, and knowing that his aunt was about to take up her carpet, Charlie thought to take a hand in the work. He went to the wardrobe, climbed up on a chair, and began to search for a tack hammer in a drawer where miscellaneous household conveniences were kept. He failed to find what he wanted, but he did find a four-barrelled Sharp's pistol, which at once engrossed his attention. After handling it for awhile, he cocked it just as Mrs. Dowler appeared at the door of the room. The lad, thoughtlessly and without any conception of the great danger of the act, pointed the pistol at her, with the remark, "Look out, Aunt Lib, I'm going to shoot you." As he said this, he pulled the trigger, and there was a report, accompanied by the scream of the lady as she fell to the floor. Little Gracie began to cry, and Charlie, comprehending that something terrible had happened, ran to the prostrate lady and begged her to get up and stop acting that way, as it frightened his sister so much. Blood was now flowing upon the carpet, and the children, losing all presence of mind, stood there without making an effort to summon assistance. After recovering from the first shock, Mrs. Dowler managed to arise, and staggering to the door, went down stairs by way of the railing and opened the front door, bleeding profusely at each step. She saw Miss Van Dilien, who lives next door, and had just started to call out that Charlie had shot her with a revolver, when she again fell to the floor. In a few moments Mrs. Cottrell and several neighbors were gathered around her, and she was carried to her bed. Dr. O'Gallagher was summoned without delay, and finding that the bullet had entered the right breast and penetrated the cavity in the direction of the heart, he pronounced the case hopeless. Dr. Bigger was called in, and the two physicians did what they could to alleviate the sufferings of the lady. She stated to them the details of the shooting as above given, and the little boy, who was greatly grieved by the result of his thoughtlessness, made a like statement. At half-past nine o'clock, just an hour after the shooting, the patient died. She was perfectly conscious to the last, and requested that she be buried by the side of her husband.

The Coroner was notified, and, an examination being made, a verdict of death by accidental shooting was rendered.—St. Louis Republican.

Undue Familiarity.

The late Dr. Sprague, of Albany, was a gentleman of the old school type, of remarkable courteousness of manner and of corresponding reverence of feeling. He never trifled with the names of prominent men, and it is hardly probable that he could suppose anyone would use his name with undue familiarly. The following anecdote illustrative of this characteristic of the grand old man, was related to us by one of his sons, and subsequently by knowledgsi, with a hearty laugh, by the elder son of whom it was told.

One day at the breakfast table, this son, then in business in Albany, but living at his father's house, spoke of "Charley Bridgman." The name arrested his father's attention, and he said:

"My son, of whom are you speaking?"

"Of Mr. Bridgman, father," was the reply.

"Not of Rev. Dr. Bridgman, surely, William?"

"Why yes, father; why not?"

"Why not? my son, because such familiarity in connection with a prominent preacher is unbecoming. I am quite surprised and shocked at your freedom; and I hope he has no knowledge of it."

"Why yes, he has, father. I have called him 'Charley' to his face!

"Charley' to his face; and does he call you William?"

"Well no! father no; I can't say that he does."

"Well, what does he call you then?"

"Generally he calls me 'Bill.'"

This was too much for the good Doctor, and with ill-suppressed sympathy with the mirth that rang round the tea-table, he made good his retreat.—Chicago Standard.

Devastation and Death.

Destructive Tornadoes in Portions of Wisconsin and Illinois—Great Loss of Life and Property.

A tornado struck Mineral Point, Wis., about five o'clock on the afternoon of the 22d, doing great damage to property and resulting in the loss of several lives. The following particulars are given by telegraph:

A large stone brewery and several buildings surrounding it were demolished.

At the residence of John Spenceley there was a large family reunion. Mrs. Waller, mother of John Waller, one of the party, was instantly killed. The rest of the inmates of the house miraculously escaped with only slight injuries. The residence of Judge Cothren was also struck by the storm, and his mother, an aged lady, killed.

After wrecking Mr. Spenceley's house, the cyclone lifted the house of Mr. Leonard from its foundation and shivered it to atoms in the air, carrying with it Mrs. Leonard, whose body was found 100 yards distant, mangled in a fearful manner.

Wheat carried off the house of John Coleman, badly injuring Mr. Coleman, also two daughters and Tip Allen, who were in the house at the time.

Benjamin Bennett's house was totally destroyed, and Mrs. Bennett thrown over to a wood-pile, escaping with but little injury.

The houses of James Pitten and William Jacks were destroyed.

At the brewery of C. Gellman the storm did the greatest amount of damage, carrying off the houses of Mr. Gellman and Mr. Adams, and badly injuring a Miss Zimmer. The brewery building and barn connected therewith were totally demolished, and a number of valuable horses killed.

The houses situated in the summer garden of John Brown, opposite the brewery, were destroyed, and Mrs. Myers and Mary Brick were killed. Mr. Bohman's family, who lived a short distance from the gardens, were dangerously injured, and Mrs. Boban died about midnight.

The house of Martin O'Dowd was reduced to ruins. Mr. Beardsley's house and barn were carried seven or eight rods from the foundations. William Cocking's house was taken, and nothing left but a few pieces of the furniture.

A school house, about two and a half miles east of the city, was carried off, with the teacher and scholars. Two of the scholars, a teacher and sister, were killed and the teacher slightly injured. The teacher, while holding one of the smaller scholars in her arms, was thrown several rods. Most of the children are unhurt.

MINERAL POINT, Wis., May 25.

The storm originated twelve miles southwest of this city, doing no considerable damage until within one mile of here, when it struck Hollinger's and carried it away, also killing five cows. After leaving the Town of Mineral Point it divided, and came together again six miles east of here, in the Town of Waldwick. It swept everything before it for a distance of twelve miles, where it again divided. Mr. Kramer's place was totally destroyed, and the next was Dewey. Along fifty houses and barns were destroyed from here to Ashenville. Here took place one Harley's store, three mills, six persons were killed, one school-house, church and store demolished. Moscow is also a ruin, and four persons killed. Two families are known away, and as yet nothing has been heard of them. From there to Perry is eight miles, and nothing is left where the tornado struck. Perry is carried away. The damage from here to Perry is estimated at $100,000, and fifteen lives lost. The Welch settlement, ten miles west, is completely demolished. Several reported killed on the ground seven or eight miles southwest of Madison, and again struck the earth near Fort Atkinson, northeast of here. Near Primrose and Paoli the storm seemed from a half to a mile in width, and swept everything before it, mowing down trees, fences, barns, houses and shrubbery as if with a scythe.

BARNESTON, Ill., May 25.

The precinctrifles of the tornado, which swept through this town last Tuesday, do not seem to be appreciated to any of the correspondents. The formation of the great rolling cloud, which expression fitly describes the tornado, was seen by a witness who explains that it was in reality a jetting together of two clouds approaching from opposite directions, and that neither one had any danger in mind joined with the other. It seems to have left almost a mile in width, though not out the whole of its career; that is, after it struck the house five miles from here. Before that time it had been gradually dropping toward the earth, but after that it maintained substantially the same height all the way. This is very clear from the fact that in the low places, bogs and among the timber which it passed it scarcely touched anything, where, as when it came to a piece of ground, or a hill of any kind, its force was terrible.

The appearance of the country over which it passed is most extraordinary. There is what might be called a furrow about 200 feet wide, perfectly black, and having not a fixed thing resting in it. That is, the turf was torn up and thrown either one side of the trail or forward some distance. The fences were taken bodily, excepting here and there a few posts. The hedges were stripped perfectly bare. Most of the trees were torn up by the roots, except in a few cases where they were small. In these cases the insignificance of the object saved it. The thickest white oak clearings are this swath or furrow of 200 feet is due to the fact that the whole of the soil around about is of black loam after a few inches have been cut off.

All through the path of the wind, and for as much as a half a mile on each side, the ground is sprinkled with various kinds of sticks and lumber, and, curiously enough—a thing which cannot easily be explained—all these are stuck in the ground and are upright. One can see a fence-board and the timber of a barn standing side by side upright, and so forth at a field over which the storm passed dives one the idea that some one has gone over it and driven stakes in it. This appearance is found from the beginning to the end of the career of the cloud. The cloud made some curious discriminations which are hard to explain. For instance, at Braun's place it annihilated the house itself, and even went so far as to tear out the stone lining of the cellar. And yet, within five feet of that place, it left the floor of a stickers and it took one of the beams out of the barn and brought it forward some 100 feet, throwing it down near where the house had stood, though the barn was some distance further on in the direction that the cloud was going. Again, it killed almost every living thing which it came in contact, but made a curious exception of Braun's horses. It smashed up his hogs, and sheep, and poultry, but the horses were comparatively unhurt, and will recover. It is most remarkable as a person living here to see the path picked out by the cloud from the time it left Elgin until the time it disappeared. Its full force struck but one house, though others were somewhat affected. And yet it was almost impossible to pick out a straight line through the town without encountering at least a dozen residences. Probably a mile and a half could not have laid down a path for such a tornado and had it strike only one house, as this one did. If it had veered to the right or left a hundred feet, it would have taken at least a dozen places.

Three persons were killed in this vicinity.

An Office-Seeker's Blunder.

A good story is told of Mr. Scranton, of Madison, the ex-President of the old Shore Line Railroad. In a train that was on the way to New London, a short time ago, Gov. Hubbard was a passenger. His Excellency sat quietly reading a newspaper. In a seat on the other side of the car, and at the rear of the Governor, sat our old friend Clark, of Chester, and Mr. S. H. Scranton, of Madison. The former, who had just been using his handkerchief, said to Mr. Scranton, with a slight flirt of the handkerchief in the intended direction, "That's Gov. Hubbard."

"Is it, indeed?" said Scranton: "I've been wanting to see him, and get acquainted with him; and I'll speak to him."

Whereupon Mr. S. quietly went three seats ahead and addressed Railroad Commissioner Arnold, of Haddam:

"Good morning, Gov. Hubbard: I've been wanting to make your acquaintance; I am S. H. Scranton, of Madison."

Mr. Arnold stared, but bowed; and his new friend proceeded:

"The fact is, Governor, I'm about as much of a Democrat as a Republican; I vote to suit myself. I've been thinking, Governor, that I would like an appointment on the Railroad Commission, and if you can fill that the next vacancy with my appointment I would feel much gratified."

Mr. Arnold bowed again.

"The fact is, Governor," his new acquaintance proceeded, "the truth is, the present Commission don't practically amount to much, especially Arnold. He ain't worth a row of pins. He just goes over the road, takes up a here and there, glances at the bridge timbers, perhaps, and is off again. What does such an examination amount to? Now if I get his place I'll promise you there shall be real service rendered. I'm a practical railroad man."

Mr. Arnold, being now fully convinced of the real situation, blandly bowed again—sort of bow of encouragement—and said he'd think it over; and Mr. Scranton went back, well pleased at the prospect. It is said the story would never have got out but for the fun-enjoying Clark.—Hartford (Conn.) Times.

The "National Game."

For the next few months the American people will be frequently and forcibly reminded of the so-called "National game." Until the middle or latter part of June Congress will receive a share of attention, but after that there will be no reason why the public mind should not be wholly devoted to baseball. The forty or fifty young men who compose the "league clubs" should feel highly flattered at this state of things, and it is to be hoped will feel a due sense of responsibility as National representatives. It is quite true that in some respects they fill very short of representing the National intelligence, but in the matter of pitching, batting, catching, fielding, etc., they are undoubtedly pre-eminent, and will probably be the bright, particular models whom the youth of the land will spend their summer vacations in trying to imitate. There will be some broken limbs, a large number of disjointed fingers, and not a few fractured skulls, but these are insignificant compared with making progress in the National game. Base-ball, like other manias, is exclusive in its nature. Aspiring to be recognized as the National game it discourages all other ball games as irregular and illegitimate. Occupying the whole field, it leaves no room for others. In former years there was a variety of these, and if they were not played with as much science or jockeying as base-ball is played with now, they at least furnished jolly good sport to the youth of the last generation. Elder readers will easily recall some of these. There was the simple game of "two old cat," in which the ball passed back and forth between two pitchers and two strikers, the pitchers being also catchers. There was not much room for fine fielding or jockeying in this game, and we never heard of any pool-selling in connection with it; but it was an honest, enjoyable old game for all that. "Three old cat" was the same game played on a triangle, the ball passing round and round, and all hands alternating at the bat, as they caught in or got caught out. Then there was "bull pen," in which there was no batting except on the body. The ball passed from hand to hand until it got riled, and then some fellow was "soaked" with it in a way he despised. "Run around," or, it was sometimes called, base-ball, was the nucleus of the present game of that name. There were no regular "nines," but sides had to be chosen. This, after the leaders were selected, was generally done by one of them tossing up a stick or ball-club, which the other caught, and then each one placed his disabled hand over that of the other, alternately, until the one who caught the end of the stick had first choice. If he could catch it by a very small end, but tight enough to throw it over his head, that was enough. The pitchers and catchers were selected by common consent or acclamation, and in that, as in other matters, universal suffrage did not always put the best men in office. Sometimes a lazy fellow who wanted to play, but did not like to run after balls, would set up a plain as pitcher, which would be recognized without much questioning. The playing was not very scientific, but it furnished good sport. The game could be learned without a teacher. There were no salaries paid, no leagues, no admission fees, no pool-selling, but it was a brave old game, notwithstanding. There were other games of hand-ball, not to speak of foot-ball and hockey, or more popularly "shinny." These filled an important place in the sports of former years, but they are rooted out and displaced now by "the National game," with its accompanying rules, its fearful and wonderful vocabulary, its high-salaried players, who make enough during the summer months to enjoy a whole winter of obscurity and idleness, its salaried umpires, captains, managers, etc. All this goes to prove that times change, and that we are a progressive people. The youth of the last generation thought they enjoyed their simple games, but they didn't. The right way for people to play ball is to throw a few unnecessary chaps to play for them, and then bet on the result.—Indianapolis Journal.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—The selection of a May Queen in Wilton, Wis., was attended with considerable strife and excitement. Miss Jones received 8,191 votes, and Miss Pace, the next highest candidate, 4,312. The ballots cost ten cents each, and everybody could cast as many as desired by paying proportionately. The gain to base ball by the event at this place was $1,200. There were several incidental lights, growing out of heated advocacy of the rival sayleents.

—A convicted thief in New Mexico aroused the inmates of the jail by his cries. He was found lying on the floor of his cell, professedly unable to move. He said that he had fallen from the roof and injured his spine. During the ensuing month he pretended to be in constant and terrible pain; and on his being carried to Court for sentence, the sympathetic Judge imposed the lightest possible penalty. Afterward it was discovered that the thief had not been hurt at all.

—A parrot created a sensation in a baggage-car on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad the other day. The cage was inclosed in paper and set on a trunk and was soon forgotten. As the conductor and other trainmen were passing through the car they heard a spiritual voice issuing apparently from the coffin, crying, "Leave out!" They were startled and frightened, and thought they had a sure case of a ghost, till polly was discovered whining for liberty.

—There is now on trial in our courts a man possessed of a good trade, and capable of earning a decent living in any city or town in the country. Under the influence of liquor, a few weeks since, he attempted to knife a man unknown, and he will now pay for a few glasses of vile whisky by spending more or less time in the Penitentiary. Thursday's evening train brought to Denver another less fortunate victim. He, too, had been imbibing vile whisky, and, while under the influence, drove the lock of a gun through the brain of an antagonist, from the effects of which he died. Poison in the form of carbolic acid, used as a wash for his limb, and died of fright. He was apparently well at four p. m. Sunday, and at seven p. m. he was dead. Late an orange on Saturday, and thought it tasted of the acid, which caused him to faint, but he was quieted in a little while. The physicians say in their report to the Coroner: "We find, from a thorough examination and careful investigation, that his death was caused by syncope or fainting; that we carefully examined the stomach and found no traces of poison of any kind; the coats of the stomach and intestines free from inflammation; from the appearance of the heart, it was evident from the absence of blood in its walls and their collapsed condition, that he died of syncope or faintness; the condition of his limb warranted the belief that its leg would be returned to usefulness," as all of the parts surrounding the fracture were in a healthy condition, and reparation of the bone already commenced and favorably prospering." The jury reported that it would not ascertain the cause of death.—Chicago Herald.

AGRICULTURAL BREVITIES.

—The following are taken from the agricultural columns of the Iowa State Register:

Excessive watering is bad for geraniums.

Turkey eggs begin to pip the 26th day after setting.

When preparing soil, for house plants, bake it, to destroy the worms.

Bear down hard on food crops, and raise all possible that will save buying or exchange.

Butter does not improve as cheese does by age, therefore the sooner it is sold the better.

Hard water becomes nearly soft by boiling. A piece of chalk will soften hard spring water.

A half-starved professional man or merchant is far less to be envied than a well-to-do farmer.

Nothing beautifies a house more than healthy house plants. To be healthy they must have proper care and attention.

Smilax is a beautiful vine, invaluable for house or dress decoration, and should have a place among favorite house plants.

Fuschias prosper better by being shaded in the bottom of the flower pot, and some rusty nails to supply the oxide of iron.

Cows are in proportion as they are selected with care, fed with judgment, and their product of milk worked up with skill and nicety.

This is our sad dilemma: We are back to the time of our fathers in the price of what we have to sell, but in our expenses we are not.

Weeds are the farmers' most inveterate enemies. This season they will make an early and vigorous start. Resolve to let no weed escape.

There is no time on the farm now for visiting, fishing or idleness. Vigilance and energy are required to keep the weeds and grass in subjection in corn fields.

No matter how much self-denial it may take, we must cease expecting to live by our wits and get something for nothing—but we must get down to work.

There is no accidental wealth resulting from farming; the successful are the vigilant, and it often requires a lifetime of intelligent industry to compass a competence.—Hon. Jas. Wilson.

Examination is said to reveal that it is many of the blinders worn by horses are so arranged that they strike the eyes of the animals with every step taken, causing blindness in many cases.

A farmer who drifts into the year's work without any plan is like a General who starts out on a campaign without arrangements, or a lawyer going into court without preparation for his cause.

An exchange very truly says that nothing is gained by putting seed into the ground before it is warm enough to start the germ, and that more harm will be done while the plants are feeble by weeds than can be given at daybreak. With regard to animal food there is none equal to the natural supply of worms and insects obtained by the hen when she is at large; small worms or a shovelful of mold, containing an ants' nest, may be given, if chickens are in a confined situation, and will be found far superior to boiled egg, chopped meat, or any more artificial substitute. Cooping, which is frequently employed to prevent the wandering of hens with chickens, is not desirable, and though in many cases it is a necessary evil, yet not the less an evil.—American Cultivator.

Plant Cultivation.

In order to obtain good plants, especially those for the vegetable garden, it is absolutely essential to raise them from seed, for those offered for sale in the markets are grown for sale and are neither healthy nor robust. If, however, there are no facilities for seed propagation and the purchase of plants becomes unavoidable, the following instructions will be found valuable:

Select those that have short, robust stems, for a long or slender stem indicates that the plants have been rapidly forced by artificial heat, or were grown too close together, in which case the sides and undergrowth have been excluded from the light and air, and the plants have, as it were, stretched their necks in their efforts to reach the light. If a plant has a small stem and leaves are in proportion to the foliage, it is weakly from having been forced too quickly or under too great a heat. The more root, the stronger and the greater the growing capacity of the plant. If the leaves are of a yellow cast, it may occur from an unhealthy condition caused, in all probability, from having been but recently taken from the hotbed or forcing-house, from the plant-bed or from taken from the plant-bed too long, and, in some cases, from there being insects or grubs at the roots. If the roots are very short, it shows that they have been carelessly taken from the beds and the rootlets have been broken off. A short or stubby root is always detrimental to the plant, while if the rest of the plant is robust it is of little consequence if the foliage is small or short, providing that it has a deep-green, vigorous appearance.

The object of transplanting is to check the growth of the foliage and promote that of the root, and this is best done while the plants are young, so that they may not receive a growing check. If they are finally planted out, there will be sufficient root to support a vigorous growth. As soon as the plants are well above the surface of the soil they should be thinned out; that is, the weaker ones should be removed, so that they may have free access to the air and not be crowded. In thinning out, leave the shortest and strongest plants, keeping them as nearly as possible an equal distance apart and with a small space between the leaves of one plant and those of the next. As soon as the plants have six visible leaves the first transplanting (called the pricking out) should be performed. First the seed bed should be watered, and about an hour afterward the plants should be removed to another bed, prepared of rich, light soil. In removing the plants from the old bed it is of great consequence to preserve the rootlets, and to this end a three or four pronged fork should be employed, lifting the plants gently and handling them carefully, planting them nearly up to the leaves in the new bed, placing them three or four inches apart, and pressing the earth very lightly down them, and, finally, lightly sprinkling them with water. The bed in which they are transplanted should be prepared rather dry, and if out of doors just before a shower of rain is the best time. Plants that have been thus transplanted not only grow to greater perfection, but are more hardy and will stand a protracted drought much better.—Scientific American.

Modern case of Roman father, etc.: Oliver Patrick Burns, of New York, ran in his own and only son, Dennis, for being a swaying lunatic. He would also complain against his offspring for stealing his mother's silver pitcher and pawning it so as to get the spree. However, the paternal heart relented, and the boy would have got off, but for the Justice, who told him in bail and the father as a witness.

A SUGGESTION of the beef-producing resources of the Argentine Republic and Uruguay, is given in the casual news item of a London newspaper—that 50,000 ox-tongues constituted a part of the cargo brought by the steamer Montego from the River Plata to Southampton, the other day. The hides, it seems, also largely cross the Atlantic from the Rio de la Plata, while the chief part of the flesh is sold in Brazil.

"WHAT can you do as a farm?" inquired a farmer of a man who wanted work. "Why, I can knock down to build a stone wall?" "Oh! yes. Any fool knows that. You just have to set one stone on another." "No you don't!" thundered the farmer. "You have to set one stone on two. You can go."

Management of Chickens.

Chickens require neither food nor drink on the day on which they are hatched. Both are injurious, as they interfere with the natural digestion of the yolk, which is absorbed into the bowels at the period of hatching, and constitutes the first food. If grits, oatmeal and the like are spread before the hen on the evening of the day she is induced to leave the nest, the last-hatched chickens are unable to follow, and being weakly, frequently perish. If undisturbed, the hen seldom leaves the nest on the twenty-first day, while on the following second day the chickens will be found strong enough to follow with safety. The plan of cramming pepper-corns or grains of barley down the throats of newly-hatched chickens is exceedingly injurious. The best food for them is sweet, coarse oatmeal, mixed into a crumbly paste with milk, and a certain proportion of custard made by beating together an egg with two tablespoonfuls of milk and "setting" it by a gentle heat. Custard is made to be eaten with avidity, and the chickens make rapid progress upon it. Such a preparation is far superior to the hard-boiled egg so often employed, and which is not relished by the chicken, and the same is also very fond of a little cold oatmeal porridge; milk is frequently used to mix the barley or oatmeal, but it should be remembered that it soon becomes sour in summer, and is decidedly injurious if employed in that state. No more food, therefore, should be mixed with milk than can be eaten in a few hours. Sopped bread is by no means desirable, since it does not appear to afford the necessary resistance to the natural grinding of the gizzard, and consequently the chickens soon become weakly and affected with diarrhœa from its use. In order to satisfy the hunger of the hen, which is usually very great when she leaves the nest, it is quite desirable to give her as much grain as she can consume. Then, having satisfied her own appetite, and quenched her thirst, which at this time is considerable, she will brood over her unfledged young and keep them at rest, whilst they are digesting the yolk that has been absorbed just before hatching. After the first few days some whole grain, such as small tail wheat, or some barley, may be given to the young brood, and it will be found to be greatly relished, and doubtless affords a wholesome exercise for the extraordinary grinding power of the gizzard. Chickens should either have a constant supply of food, or be fed at very short intervals. The first food should be given at daybreak. With regard to animal food there is none equal to the natural supply of worms and insects obtained by the hen when she is at large; small worms or a shovelful of mold, containing an ants' nest, may be given, if chickens are in a confined situation, and will be found far superior to boiled egg, chopped meat, or any more artificial substitute. Cooping, which is frequently employed to prevent the wandering of hens with chickens, is not desirable, and though in many cases it is a necessary evil, yet not the less an evil.—American Cultivator.

AT this season of the year the human system is liable to become disordered from the insufficient efforts of the liver to discharge the excess of bile. If nature is not assisted in her efforts, severe bilious attacks, or prostrating fevers necessarily follow, causing great suffering and even death. A little timely precaution, however, will prevent all this, and may be found in that favorite household remedy, SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

Simmons' Liver Regulator has been in use for half a century and there is not one single instance on record where it has failed to effect a cure when taken in time, according to the directions. It is without doubt the greatest Liver Medicine in the world; in perfectly assisting nature to throw off the poisonous secretions and bowels, containing no mercury or any injurious mineral substance, it may be taken by children of infant years, and has superseded those medicines in places where they have been known extensively used. Procure a box at a store free your druggist, do not delay; give it a fair trial, and you will be more than satisfied with the result obtained.

CAUTION!

As there are a number of imitations offered to the public, we would caution the community to buy no (vowels) or Prepared SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, unless in our engraved Wrapper, with Trade-Mark, Stamp and Signature unbroken. None other is genuine.

Suits for Small Boys.

THE suits worn by small boys are very much simpler than the kilt suits lately worn, and altogether more comfortable for the child. In the first place, the clumsy vest is dispensed with; then the kilt is not so heavy, as the most stylish kilts are plain in front and have only about eleven plaits behind, all turning one way. Moreover, this kilt skirt is sewed to a waist of shieda something in vest shape, the whole garment is buttoned down the front, and when the cutaway coat is put on the suit is complete. For very plain suits those are made in beige-colored linen bound with dark-brown braid; they cost $2.50. For better suits, sold at ten dollars, gray cloths of light quality, olive mixtures, Scotch Cheviots, basket-weaves and quadrille cloths are used Dress suits made in the same style are of dark brown or blue cloth, so smooth that it is called button cloth. These have two rows of fine silk braid doubled for trimming, and very small flat plain buttons. The collars are cut deep and square. Similar suits are made of white pique for very little fellows, and are trimmed with pique braiding. Finally, blue flannel, trimmed with black, blue or white braid, is made up in this way for country suits.

Instead of the yoke aprons worn by little girls, boys of two or three years have pinnoesse coats or slips of light cloth or linen, cut with kilt skirting behind and an Ulster belt, to slip on easily over their snowy-white underclothes.

Boys just in trousers wear knee pantaloons and single-breasted cut-aways; coats precisely like those worn with kilts. Sometimes the coat is left off and they wear only a shirt-waist of white percale, with colored coral figure or dark-blue design, or else one of blue and pink. These have six plaits down each side of the front, but the backs are gathered. They are long enough to reach over the hips, and are held in shape by a belt stitched on the outside; on this belt are eight buttons, by which the garments are to be fastened. The collar is Byron shape and the cuffs are square. Such waists are sold ready made for the same price are white waists with plaited linen fronts. Light overcoats for small boys are long single-breasted sacks made of pale gray or brown quadrille cloth.—Harper's Bazar.

He Was Moving.

At one o'clock in the morning the police heard a great uproar on Congress street, and they hurried to the scene to find a man lying in the road with a feather bed, a chair, a looking-glass, a skirt-board and about a dozen other articles of household furniture holding him down. Under the supposition that he had stolen the things, and likewise finding him too drunk to go on, the officers took the man down.

"William Bolton," began His Honor as the prisoner came before him, "this is a suspicious case. You were found—"

"Yes, I know," interrupted the man, "I know all about it. Those things belong to me. I was moving all day yesterday, and that was the last load. It's the fourth time we've moved in one year. No sooner do we get the carpets down and the stovepipe jammed together than my wife is anxious to move again. I've broken my back in putting down carpets, cracked my ribs lifting stoves, and lost flesh lugging old bedsteads up stairs and down. Now, Judge, send me up! Give me the longest term you can; I want rest. I want to put in a month somewhere where I can't hear anything about moving."

"Man of sadness," softly replied His Honor, "I've been there. I know how the obi thing works. I sympathize with you, and while I cannot send you up, I hope that your wife will let you have one or that you may be run over by a street car."

"Judge, drop a tear for me when you see my death in the papers!"

"I will!"

"And have the papers say that no one—"

"I will do so, and now—move on."—Detroit Free Press.

Fashions in Gentlemen's Clothes.

There is but little change to be noticed in full-dress suits this season. For promenade suits the "Albert frock" will be largely worn. It is made from dark blue and black diagonals or black and colored cloths and kerseys. Made from the same materials are the "English walking coat" and the "cutaway." That last-mentioned is cut to fit the form closely, and will be worn more generally by young men. The vests are cut from the same material, with or without collars, and buttoning up high. The tendency of all goods for trouserings is to stripes, even though they are faintly defined in some cases.

The suit known as the "Alfonso" is bidding for popular favor. It is made from imported and domestic cassimeres and cheviots, and is cut in the form of a straight sack, cut round at the bottom of the skirt in front, with a short collar and plain wide sleeves. The vest is cut long, without collar, and the trousers with wide seam and rather large in the legs, but shaped gracefully. The London sack "Regent" and "Conservative," with some unimportant changes in its outlines, will still be much worn.—N. Y. Post.

It's a luxury wherein all is life and laugh instead of crying and fretting, there is sure to be found Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup. Price, 25 cents a bottle.

Natural Selection.

Investigators of natural science have demonstrated, beyond controversy, that throughout the animal kingdom the "survival of the fittest" is the only law that vouchsafes thrift and perpetuity. Does not the same principle govern the commercial prosperity of man? An inferior article supersede a superior article. Illustrative of this principle are the family medicines of R. V. Pierce, M. D., of Buffalo, N. Y. By reason of superior merit, they have outstrivaled all other medicines. Their sale in the United States alone exceeds one million dollars per annum, while the amount exported foots up to several hundred thousand more. No business could grow to such gigantic proportions were it not for some other basis than that of merit. It is safe to say that no medicine or combination of medicines yet discovered equals or can compare with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, for the cure of coughs, colds, and all pulmonary and blood affections. If the bowels be constipated and liver sluggish, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets will give prompt relief; while his Favorite Prescription will positively, perfectly and permanently, cure those weaknesses and "peculiarities" sensitive females are heir to. Sold by People's Common Sense Medical Adviser, a illustrated work of nearly one thousand pages, the Doctor has fully illustrated the many diseases that underlie health and sickness. Price $1.50, postpaid. Address as said and young, single and married, Address R. V. Pierce, M. D., World's Dispensary and Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

A Newspaper Wonder.

THE ADVOCATE, a Greenback Labor paper, published in New York, has created a marked excitement among publishers. It was begun in May, 1875, as a local paper at Spring Valley, Rockland County, and on January 1st, 1877, removed to New York. The first issue in that year was 4,36 copies, using twenty-five pounds of white paper, postage fifty cents, while the issue of May 23d instant was 76,000, using near nine tons of white paper and paying $300 postage. This has been done by a direct but bold method of advertising. The company expect to reach a circulation of 2,500,000 in 1880, and propose to expend $300,000 in advertising to secure that end. It, during the months of June, July, August and September, through its Advertising Agent, E. Duncan Griffin, 31 and 32 Astor House, N. Y., quite a advertisement of one column into 3,400 papers, including the city dailies. If business men would take courage and show faith in printer's ink a much greater boom would be given to business by reviving business.

Dr. Howe's Testimony.

During the past two years I have given Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites a fair though somewhat severe test, and am pleased to say that patients suffering from emaciation and the debility following acute disease, have invariably improved under its use in all cases considered hopeful. In chronic cases of consumption, and in those of a scrofulous diathesis, where deposits of old tubercular matters, whose disorganizing forces remained after the cessation of the original disease, and in fact for debility from any cause, I know of nothing equal to it.

New Paper.—We have received a copy of the Emmet County Independent, just started at Little Traverse by C. H. Hampton, in the interest of the Nation al Greenback party. It is typographically all that could be desired, and is edited by a man of ability. But we will be frank and say that we do not wish it success so long as it sails under the flag that it has flung to the breeze. We regard its politico-financial faith as a fallacy, and a doctrine that would anchor the ship of state to the shifting sands of financial error and discredit. Outside of these reasons, no man better deserves success than brother Hampton, and we hope ere long he will discover his error and come out upon the side of an honest money system. For after all, we shall not feel very bad if the Independent does gently wail; as here's our paw.

Preserve the Trees.—Charlevoix has the reputation of being a beautiful village, and that reputation is justly deserved. One of the most prominent features of the beauty of Charlevoix is the existence of the beautiful groves which are allowed to remain throughout the village, and the fine large trees which stand in our streets at various points. The Township authorities have widely set an example by providing for the protection of these trees, and we hope every property owner in the village will follow it. Preserve the trees. Trim them up; train their foliage, set out new ones, and take care of them. In future years our children will bless their parents for providing them with the cool shade of the beautiful trees, and the stately trunks of the thrifty beech and maple will stand as monuments of our wisdom.

STATE OF MICHIGAN Thirteenth Judicial Circuit. In Chancery.

In pursuance of the Commissioner for the County of Charlevoix in Chancery at the village of Charlevoix, and dated, on the ninth day of May A. D. 1878.

Present, Hon. Reuben Hatch, Jr., Circuit Judge.

Richmond National Bank, Complainant.

Henry C. Murden and Agnes A. Marden, Defendants.

In this cause, it appearing from affidavit on file, that the defendants, Henry C. Murden and Agnes A. Murden, are not residents of this State, but are residents of Denver, in the county of Weld, and state of Indiana. On motion of Simonds & Fletcher, complainant's solicitors, ordered that the appearance of said non-resident defendants, and each of them be entered herein within three months from the date of this order and in case of their appearance they cause their answer to the Bill of Complaint to be filed, and a copy thereof to be served on the complainant's solicitors within twenty days after service on them of a copy of said bill and notice of this order; and in default thereof said bill will be taken as confessed by said non-resident Defendants; and it is further ordered that within twenty days the complainant cause a notice of this order to be published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, published and circulating in said county, and that such publication be continued therein once in each week for six weeks in succession, or that he cause a copy of this order to be personally served on said non-resident defendants at least twenty days before the time above prescribed for their appearance.

DENTAL.—Dr. J. B. and G. H. Hill will be in Charlevoix Wednesday and Thursday of this week to attend to any work in their line.

The excursion of the Charlevoix Cornet Band, announced for last Tuesday afternoon was postponed on account of the weather, and comes off this (Tuesday) afternoon.

The Harbor and River bill passed the Senate on the 12th, after some amendments in favor of Southern harbors. It has to go back to the House for concurrence in the amendments, which probably has taken place ere this. We shall expect to soon see advertisements for proposals on Charlevoix harbor work.

Fourth of July.—A meeting of citizens was held at the Town Hall on monday evening the 10th, to talk up the 4th of July question, and considerable interest was manifested in favor of a celebration. Committees were appointed to secure an orator, the band, etc., and everything looks fair for an old fashioned celebration. We hope to see the entire region participate.

Is Will Pay.—A movement is on foot to gravel Bridge Street from the bridge the entire length, and a large amount of volunteer labor has been pledged. This is an improvement much needed, and we hope all interested will respond generously when the time comes.

The Little Traverse Republican says "The propeller 'Morning Star,' from Cleveland, a boat about the size of the 'Van Raalte,' will run between this place and Mackinaw via Cheboygan, this season in connection with the G. R. & I. R. R. It is expected here in a day or two. Capt. Donovan is Master."

Capt. Wilson, of the tug Tillson, arrived here from Sheboygan, Wis., on Friday, whither he went in answer to a summons from his wife's husband. His wife was dead before he reached her, however.

New Firm at Boyne.—Sterling & Mooney, have received the machinery for their saw mill to be erected at the head of Pine Lake, and a stock of goods for a store. The mill will be put up immediately. The same firm proposes to erect a grist mill next season. We wish them success.

The trout fishing in the Boyne river is said to be improving, and is quite equal to the Jordan for angling. Both streams are unsurpassed in America as trout streams.

Sent Down.—Joseph Boutilier, of the Township of South Arm, has about eighteen more days to enjoy the boundless hospitality of the Charlevoix county jailor. Before Justice Coley on the 14th, it was shown that he cruelly beat his wife, breaking her ribs, and nearly killing her. About sixty lashes with a cat-o'-nine-tails, well put on, would be more commensurate with the offense, were it within the province of the law to inflict them. A person whose sensibilities are so blunted as a wife beaters' must be, won't consider himself very badly punished by being imprisoned twenty days, especially if the living is plentiful. Put the dog on mush and black strap, we say.

Call for Smith's saleratus, it is the best in use. We always keep it.

THE STATE TICKET.

An Enthusiastic Convention—Unanimous Re-Nomination of Gov. Croswell.

The State Convention, held at Detroit on the 12th, was one of the largest and most enthusiastic gathering ever held in the State. Harmony prevailed. The strong ring of true Republican metal characterized the proceedings throughout. The convention took a firm stand on the financial question, and denounced in unmistakable terms repudiation and irredeemable paper. The following ticket was put in the field:

Governor—Chas. M. Croswell.
Lieut. Gov.—Alonzo Sessions, of Ionia.
Secretary of State—Wm. Jenney, of Macomb.
State Treasurer—B. D. Pritchard, of Allegan.
Auditor General—W. L. Latimer, of Meeosta.
Com'r State Land Office—J. M. Nesmith of Kalamazoo.
Attorney General—Otto Kirchner, of Wayne.

The ticket is a strong one, and is going to win! Let the Republicans of Michigan be up and doing, and show their old enemy, and the Republican fate that the fires have not gone out on Republican hearthstones!

Marine.—The tug Minnie Warren arrived here from Manistee Wednesday morning. In passing Cat. Head point she hugged the reef too close, and struck, breaking her stem, and dishearting her rudder post. She made this port safely however.

The tug Commodore Nott left here Saturday morning for Manistee, to receive repairs upon her boiler.

A half interest in the scow Hercules has been purchased by Capt. Jack, of Racine. This vessel's ill-luck continues. She was tied up in Racine for the wages of her sailing master, W. S. Johnson, and that officer left her, arriving here on the scow Prince Sunday. On her trip down the Hercules split her mainsail. She is now loading in Pine Lake.

—The scow Nellie Windlock, which lately brought goods for the new firm at the head of Pine Lake, had to put into Frankfort and repair a leak before coming up, and was detained three some time.

—The steamer Gazelle has changed her time of leaving, from 7 to 6:30 a. m.

—The old propeller Montgomery was burned to the waters' edge at Port Huron, on the 10th. Another old veteran of the steam lake untime has passed off the field of action.

Quite a fleet of vessels in the lake loading

A Boy Tickled To Death.—Great excitement.—A boy, a stranger in town, having just arrived on the evening train, sat down to tea at one our hotels and being fearfully hungry the first thing he saw was a biscuit and he was so pleased that he went into convulsions and all this caused by using Smith's saleratus made by the new process always full weight and 1/4 stronger than any other.

We have before hinted that several parties possessed of capital were looking upon Charlevoix with an eye to business, and that developments were almost ready to burst upon us. We have always contended that a point which possessed the natural facilities for manufacturing that Charlevoix does could not long escape the notice of outside moneyed men, and we have substantial reasons for asserting that this belief will be fully verified soon. When the time comes for action, we hope Charlevoix people will realize the importance of being public-spirited, and not as some a department that will drive capital away. But we are confident such will not be the case.

Inland Lodge meet at Carpenter & Bartholomew's. It is a good thing to keep in a family.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A BILL was reported in the Senate, on the 28th, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, providing for the payment of the award made by the Fishery Commission at Halifax under the Treaty of Washington; also a concurrent resolution appointing the two senior members of the Committee on Foreign Relations to act with the House committee in the report of the Commissioners. The House bill to forfeit the further retirement of Brigadier-General Ames was taken up and passed. The Army Appropriation bill was passed in the House after having agreed to an item for the transfer of the control of the Indians to the War Department. In the Senate, the number of cavalry regiments is cut down from ten to nine, and the number of companies in each regiment is reduced from eight to seven. The number of artillery companies is left at eighteen, and prohibiting under penalty of fine and imprisonment, the employment of any part of the army as a posse comitatus, or otherwise, under the pretext of the purpose of executing the law, except when such employment may be expressly authorized by act of Congress. [July 27. The conference report on the bill to encourage the growth of timber on Western prairies was agreed to. The Senate amendment to the bill for the repeal of the Bank tax, but was against the Pelouza amendment to the bill to establish a postal savings-bank, and to abolish the ratio of the internal bearing indebtedness of the United States.

A MOTION was made in the Senate, on the 28th, to proceed to the consideration of the bill to take up the House bill to remove the legal disabilities of women to practice in courts of the United States. A bill was introduced and referred to establish a board to be known as the Pacific Railroad Commission. The House once more on the ball to advance the cultivation of timber on the prairie States. The House amendment to the bill for the repeal of the Bank tax, but was against it. A favorable report was made on the bill to establish a postal savings-bank, and to abolish the ratio of the internal bearing indebtedness of the United States.

A MOTION was made in the Senate, on the 29th, to proceed to the consideration of the bill to take up the House bill to remove the legal disabilities of women to practice in courts of the United States. A bill was introduced and referred to establish a board to be known as the Pacific Railroad Commission. The House once more on the ball to advance the cultivation of timber on the prairie States. The House amendment to the bill for the repeal of the Bank tax, but was against it. A favorable report was made on the bill to establish a postal savings-bank, and to abolish the ratio of the internal bearing indebtedness of the United States.

BILLS were passed in the Senate, on the 31st ult., providing for the appointment of an additional Circuit Judge in the Seventh Judicial Circuit, composed of the States of Indiana and Illinois; the Legislature, Judicial and Executive Appropriation bill, with several amendments. On motion, the concurrent resolution appointing the two senior members of the Foreign Relations embraced in the report accompanying the bill providing for the payment of the award made by the Fisheries Commission at Halifax was taken up and adopted. Bills were passed in the House—appropriating $20,000 to defray the expenses of the Potter Investigating Committee; Senate bill for the relief of settlers on public lands under the Preemption laws in reference to the computation of time for perfecting title; Senate bill for the relief of the Special Investigating Committee in case of Mr. Cobb, who resigned on account of ill health.

In the Senate, on the 1st, the concurrent resolution for adjournment sine die, as amended by the House, fixing the 15th of June as the date, was finally agreed to. The Army bill was introduced and referred to provide for an investigation of the financial affairs and contingent and infectious diseases incident to either regular or volunteer service. The concurrent resolution appointing the two of the Committee on Foreign Relations in regard to the late Fishery award was amended and passed. A bill was introduced to confer jurisdiction in certain criminal cases. The bill amending the bilateral coinage law was considered.

THE HOUSE bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute Superintendent of Mints or Assayers in Assay Office Assistant Treasurers of the United States to receive gold coin and bullion on deposit for the purposes provided by Section 254 of the Revised Statutes, was passed in the Senate, on the 30, as was also the House joint resolution providing for the issue of arms to the Territories. The bill establishing postmasters was considered, and on a amendment to restore the franking privilege repealed by a tie vote—29 to 29. Bills were introduced in the House—to restrain the Secretary of the Treasury from anticipating the interest bonds, except in legal-tender Treasury notes; authorizing the issue of $400,000 to the United States notes to be known as "National money."

THE INVESTIGATION INTO THE ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS.

THE Select Committee of the National House of Representatives on the 27th of frauds in Florida and Louisiana, in the last Presidential election, began its examination of witnesses in Washington on the 1st. There was a large attendance of newspaper men and others. Manning, Wilson and Shellabarger were present to counsel for many witnesses. The Sub-Committee was then in session and will be composed of Messrs. Hunton, Springer and Hiscock.

The first witness examined was James E. Anderson, who stated that previous to the last Presidential election he was a clerk in the Secretary of State's office at Columbia, S. C. He was present at the time of the election he was Supervisor of Registration for Edgefield Precinct, and in that capacity made up his statement and sent it with the returns of the Commissioners of Election by mail from Beach Island to the Secretary of State at New Orleans. All the forms of law were fully complied with on election day in Edgefield. On a subsequent occasion he met Chamberlain, with Marshal Pitkin, witness told that gentleman, in answer to a question by the latter, that he had accompanied the returns, that the circumstances did not warrant it, and that there was no ground on which to make a protest, that he did not know whether the returns had been had existed but been practiced by Democrats or by Republicans. Pitkin stated to witness that a crisis existed, and it looked as if the Presidency would hinge on Louisiana, and he wished witness, if he could conscientiously do so, would make a protest against his action; witness made a statement of what he stated and it was submitted to Gardner Hardy, Chamberlain was said it did not amount to anything in law, and asked witness to make a paper, a paper was then drawn up and submitted to witness, which he refused to sign, reasons for so refusing; another paper was then drawn up, partly in blank, which witness signed, but did not sign the paper was then in reference to the number of voters that had been intimidated. He was present the last paragraph in the paper was that witness did not make the protest at the time for fear of his life, which, witness stated was the case, for if the people of Edgefield knew that thought he was going to cheat them out of the fruits of their hard-earned victory, they would have something to say than Hamlet witness then went on to state that Gov. Kellogg had subsequently to the registration expressed a desire that he (witness) should return to East Feliciana, and the organization of Democrats had said they were satisfied if he (witness) would not attempt to go back because of cowardice, he (witness) told Kellogg he would return, but the moment the Republicans found he was willing to go back, they conspired to prevent his doing so, and witness was told that the expressed desire of Gov. Kellogg to have witness return to East Feliciana was before the statement was assumed, as they (the Republicans) were afraid witness had intent for shooting or back the election being to hold an election in that county, and he came to witness on the ground that he had refused to return, and that they could not get the votes of Republicans without witness's presence. The committee then adjourned until the 2d, when Mr. Anderson will be called to the stand. Mr. Anderson was then recalled and testified that previous to the last Presidential election he was a clerk in the Secretary of State's office at Columbia, S. C. He was present at the time of the election he was Supervisor of Registration for Edgefield Precinct, and in that capacity made up his statement and sent it with the returns of the Commissioners of Election by mail from Beach Island to the Secretary of State at New Orleans. OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 14, 1878.

DEAR SENTINEL:

After a brief and somewhat inglorious existence of two months, Stewart's mammoth Women's Hotel is to move. The plant had been losing $500 a day from its commencement, besides the interest on nearly $4,000,000 and it has been thought time to stop such an appalling leak in Stewart's estate. Of course the failure of such a gigantic experiment would have been in itself an event—one of considerable importance but even that by itself would never have raised such a breeze as has followed this fiasco; for Judge Hilton, the Mephistopheles of the Stewart property, as he is sometimes regarded, gave out in closing the establishment that he had to do it because women wouldn't live where men couldn't come. That settled it. The restrictions and high prices of the hotel while in operation had rendered the Judge quite unpopular, and now arose a shriek from the sisterhood, some echo of which most, I think, already reached your readers' ears. The fair sex, or that section thereof to whom this enterprise particularly appealed, rose up as one woman and indignantly repelled this base accusation. They want the society of men! They care anything about silk hats and moustaches! The idea of insinuating such a thing! They must vindicate their freedom from such a weakness or die in the attempt. So they issued a call for a mass meeting, and packed the big hall of Cooper Union to suffocation. They made speeches and sung songs and read scathing resolutions and poetry, and called the unfortunate millionaire all the names in the dictionary, and finally circulated for signatures, a pledge not to buy a dollar's worth of dry goods of such a monster within the next five years. Then they stopped and panted for breath fully expecting, I suppose, that Judge Hilton would pull up stakes and fly the country by next train.

Instead of this, he has gone hitrickly to work made some alterations in the big building, put up in such masculine conveniences as a bar, billiard room barber shop, &c., and rechristening the place the "Park Avenue Hotel" will shortly open it to the public as a commercial hotel. Time will now tell how wise a move has been made in this change. It certainly cannot be worse pecuniarily than the first months have been.

It would seem as though this experiment settled the question of cheap, exclusive hotel accommodations for working women. This friends of the idea however claim the contrary They claim that Judge Hilton has always been opposed to the scheme and has done all he could under the circumstances to ensure its failure. While this is probably not true it can hardly be doubted that had he given it his hearty support it would not have so entirely "fizzled" as in this instance.

After half a dozen false starts and postponements, the new elevated road —or "yellowstaed road" as the punsters call it on account of the color which the iron work has been painted—was opened for travel on Wednesday the 5th and has since been doing the rushing business which public curiosity and convenience had foreordained for it. On this day too the name of the route was changed from the "Gilbert" to the "Metropolitan." The first train was a special one carrying the president of the company, Geo. M. Pullman of sleeping car fame, up and down the line. Later in the day Mr. Pullman sailed for Europe. Late in the afternoon the road had its initial accident resulting from a misplaced switch. An engine was thrown from the rails but remained on the ties and no material injury was done. The next day another casualty was reported, a train running into a man who was carelessly standing on the track, and throwing him to the pavement twenty feet below. It is to be hoped that they are not going to keep up this average of accidents, one a day, and indeed it is probable that they will exercise so much extra care in future that there is really little danger of a repetition of even these slight mishaps.

The cars on the new route are roomy and elegant within, and of very graceful and finished external appearance. The engines or "dummies" are made to resemble a small car and are all painted a light yellowish green color. The trains are nearly noiseless, and run at a high rate of speed, thirty miles an hour having been several times attained During most of the day the fare is ten cents, but on what are called "commission trains," which are run for the benefit of the working class during two morning and two evening hours, the rate is only five cents. The elevated system is proving a magnificent public convenience and success, and when the East side routes are opened there will have to be an end of all those "rapid transit" jokes which for years have been cracked all over the country at New York's expense.

I am afraid that Mr. James Gordon Bennett has an undue love for personal as well as journalistic sensations. One would think that his duel with Fred May had received public attention enough to suit even him, but it seems not. He is now out in a long card (printed over from Paris) reviving the subject, defending his course and his courage and hinting at mysterious revelations that might be made concerning the affair. If he is not careful the enterprising explorer (by proxy) of Africa and the North Pole will find himself and his personal doings as much of a public nuisance as the Beecher-Tilton affair.

The annual parade of the New York police force took place this week, and was really a good deal of a display. They turned out 1,500 strong, and in drill, uniform and general appearance were above the average of many a crack regiment. This annual parade is not only an interesting sight to the public but, I think is a very healthy spectacle to present occasionally before the eyes of the thousands of roughs, burglars and communists that infest the city. Such a body as this would make short work of any ordinary riot.

Apropos of the recent atrocious attempt to murder Emperor William of Germany, it may be interesting to know something of the frequency of attempts at regicide Within thirty years, the number of such attempts, successful and unsuccessful, has been twenty-eight including the assassination of President Lincoln. In one case, that of Napoleon III, the attacks on his life were no less than two in number, notwithstanding which he died peacefully in his bed after all.

Local summer travel is fairly under way for the season. The round will be as always a favorite highway for hot weather journeying especially as the Fall River line has those two matchless steamers, the Bristol and Providence running regularly again, from their renovation in better quarters. The Fall River is the route to the East.

RADIX.

Liver is King.

The Liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life blood and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the Liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the Liver and Stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want. For sale by Geo. W. Crozier.

The Origin of Obeisances.

Speaking of a party of Shoshones surprised by them, Lewis and Clarke say: "The other two, an elderly woman and a little girl, seeing we were too near for them to escape, sat on the ground, and, bobbing down their heads seemed as if reconciled to the death which they supposed awaited them. The same habit of bobbing down the head and inviting the enemy to strike when all chance of escape is gone, is preserved in Egypt to this day." Here we are shown an effort to propitiate by absolute submission; and from acts so prompted originate obeisances.

When, at the outset, in illustration of the truth that ceremony precedes not only social evolution but even human evolution, I named the behavior of a small dog which throws itself on its back in presence of an alarming great dog, probably many readers thought I was putting on this behavior a somewhat forced construction. They would not have thought so had they known that a parallel mode of behavior occurs among human beings. Describing the Banoka saintution, Livingstone says: "They throw themselves on their backs on the ground and, rolling from side to side, slap the outside of their thighs as expressions of thankfulness and welcome." Whether or not consciously adopted for this reason, the assumption of this attitude, which implies, "You need not subdue me, I am subdued already," is the best means of obtaining safety. Resistance generates antagonism and arouses the destructive instincts. The submissive attitude of the stronger man becomes less dangerous when the weaker animal or man passively submits; because nothing occurs to excite the passion for victory. Hence, then, the natural genesis of this obeisance by prostration on the back, which, perhaps, more than any other position, makes self-defense impracticable. I say perhaps, because another attitude may be instanced as equally helpless, which also elaborately displays complete subjugation. "At Tonga Tabu . . . the common people show their great . . . submission . . . by the most respect imaginable by prostrating themselves before him, and by putting his foot on their necks." Among the Kaffirs in Africa, Laird says the messengers from the King of Fundah "each bent down and put my foot on their heads, and threw dirt over themselves." And among ancient historic peoples this position, originated by defeat in battle, became the position assumed in acknowledgment of submission.—Herbert Spencer, in Popular Science Monthly

THE RING AGO.

Beverly Smith walked out of cell No. 5 with the greatest promptness, and as he ranged before the desk and smiled, he said:

"Well, this is indeed a surprise! Why, I hadn't the remotest idea of finding you here! Shake, old fellow!"

His Honor bumbled:

"Don't you remember your old schoolmate, Bev Smith?" inquired the prisoner. "Don't you remember how we used to steal melons together—how we both went over the mill-dam in an old boat—how we read novels under the side of haystacks?"

A strange light crept into His Honor's eyes as he replied:

"Ah! I remember you now! So you are Bev Smith?"

"I am—I am. I thought you'd remember me. I'm awful glad to see you, Judge. Are you well?"

"Quite well, thank you."

An awkward silence followed. Mr. Smith heard the boys chuckling, and he at length said:

"Glad to hear it—yes—yes. I should like to call on you and talk o'er old times."

"Beverly Smith!" said the Court, in a voice resembling the distant explosion of a coal oil can, "you receive pistol to call on the Superintendent of the House of Correction, there to remain for ninety long days and nights."

"What! Sentence au old companion?"

"All the same, Beverly—all the same. The friends of my childhood are few in number. They are falling down stairs, being drowned, blown up and run over, and I'm going to put you where you will be safe from accidents."

"Don't, Judge!"

"But I will! I prize you, Beverly. When night comes I want to know that you are in out of the wet, and when morning dawns I want to feel safe that you are safe from the clutch of ice wagons. The sentence is rendered."

"Judge, I—I—don't think I ever knew you!" stammered Beverly, but there was a light in the window for him.

HIS POOR THIRSTY.

Frank Longstreet went into a saloon on Gratiot avenue, picked up a twenty-five pound chunk of ice, and was making away with it when arrested. He had a shaky, obstinate look on his face as he was brought before the bar, and he looked up at the clock and growled:

"I'm in a hurry to get away from here!"

"One great cause of the increased ratio of mortality in this country," slowly replied His Honor, as he leaned back and felt for another fig, "is haste and impatience. You have to only four hours in a day, and seven days in a week, Mr. Longstreet, and there's no need of haste in your case. Be calm, prisoner."

"I won't keep still. I won't be calm!" exclaimed the man.

"Oh, yes, you will. I've been locking you over, and I know you will. What made you take that ice?"

"It was mine as much as his—that's why."

"Explain yourself."

"Didn't Nature make water, your Honor?"

"She did."

"And is ice anything but frozen water?"

"It is not."

"Well, isn't water called man's free beverage?"

"It is, Mr. Longstreet; your theory is perfectly correct. You burn wood at your house: Nature made wood. The forests were here before we were, therefore anyone can drive up and cart off your wood-pile. If your theory is a good one so is mine."

The man scratched his ear, pondered deeply, and taking three dollars from his vest pocket he pinned the money on the desk and whispered: "Call it square! I'm a consarned fool and you are——"

If he meant "ditto" he didn't say so. Detroit Free Press.

A Snake Den in Kansas.

Being in Concordia last Sunday, and having had my curiosity aroused several times during the last two years by what appeared to be extravagant reports of a den of snakes at some place south of Concordia, I availed myself of an invitation to substantiate the story. The first thing that attracted our attention after hitching our horses was the almost unbearable stench which invaded our nostrils, and which we soon found was caused by two enormous pyramids of dead snakes. Such a sight as met our gaze was the first of this kind is our experience, and was one that we can hardly expect to repeat. Snakes from fifteen inches to three and a half feet lay there coiled, straight, intertwined, massed and matted together, a huge pile of dead and decaying snake flesh. Not all were dead, for here and there among the pile might be seen some slightly moving and quivering, showing that they were among those which had been consigned to the increasing pile that day.

The den itself is in a high rocky knoll or bluff. The knoll is a magnesian limestone formation of a very loose porous character. About fifteen or twenty cubic yards of earth and rock had been excavated, and on each side of this hole near the bottom was a ledge of rocks beneath which an excavation appears to have been made either naturally or by some wild animal forming a narrow cage which may penetrate into the inmost recesses of the mound. In this excavation two or several young men, one of whom especially attracted our attention as, with a pair of heavy buckskin glover, he would insecurely lay upon the watch, and now and then, reaching into the cavern as far as he could reach or get his body in, he would pull therefrom with his hands a large snake. Hundreds must have been killed in this way on Sunday—certainly too many while we were there to keep any accurate count, and being not a very warm day it was not a good day for snakes either. The den was discovered two years ago by a boy who called on Mr. Graves to the spot. He says that the ground was literally alive with them, and that he succeeded in killing three hundred in about half an hour. He said that to his knowledge almost 6,000 had already been killed at that spot; and it was proposed on Sunday next to call the neighbors together for several miles around and have a "snake bee" and a general extermination day, for which they would come prepared with materials and tools to insure success by excavation if necessary.

I will only add that the snakes appear to be of the racer species, not, however, the species of blue racer common to Illinois, and not of a venomous nature. However, they show some fight when they get warmed up, and strike at an approaching object promiscuously. Atchison (Kans.) Champion.

Type-Setting in Japan.

The advantages of alphabetic writing are nowhere more conspicuously shown than in a large printing office. The compositor stands within easy reach of every character he may have need of, and a boy can learn the position of each in the case in a few hours. It is quite another matter where each word has a distinct character, as in China and Japan. A correspondent describing the office of a Japanese paper says that a full font of Japanese type comprises 50,000 characters, of which 3,000 are in constant use, and for 2,000 more there are frequent calls. The type is disposed about the compositing room on racks, like those in a reading room, and the compositors wander up and down the isles setting type and making exercise at once. With so many characters it is no wonder that Japanese proof readers have to be men of intelligence and high scholarship.

The impossibility of telegraphing a single-character words has kept this great instrument of civilization in foreign hands, and made it practically useless for the natives of China and Japan. To these the telephone is an especial blessing, which they are slow to appreciate.—Scientific American.

"I SHOULDN'T think there would be such a word as 'breakfast,'" remarked a young linguist to his mother, the other morning. "Why not, dear?" asked she. "Because, ma," replied the boy, "it ain't natural; things never break fast—they break sooner." There was a sad bewilderment of expression in the face of that mother, as she gazed speechlessly upon her precious son.

The Mound-Builders.

The announcement that a rare bird, one of the curious Mound-Builders (Megapodius Pritchardii) is on exhibition for a short time at the Central Park Menagerie, New York, furnishes the occasion for laying before our readers a few facts connected with its history. The Megapodidæ is a small family of birds included in the order Gallinæ, and are found only in Australia, New Guinea and the islands in adjacent waters, extending as far as the Philippines and Northwest Borneo. While Mr. Wallace was studying the fauna of the Malay Archipelago, he first met with one of the species (Megapodius tumulus), on the Island of Lombeck. In alluding to the family, he states that "They are all characterized by very large feet, and long, curved claws; and most of the species . . . rake and scratch together all kinds of rubbish, dead leaves, sticks, stones, earth, rotten wood, etc., till they form a large mound, often six feet high and twelve feet across, in the middle of which they bury their eggs. The natives can tell by the condition of these mounds whether they contain eggs or not; and they rob them, however they can, as the brick-red eggs (as large as those of a swan) are considered a great delicacy. A number of birds are said to join in making these mounds, and lay their eggs together, so that sometimes forty or fifty may be found. The mounds are to me very interesting objects in dense thickets, and are great puzzles to strangers, who cannot understand who can possibly have heaped together cartloads of rubbish in such out-of-the-way places; and, when they inquire of the natives, they are but little the wiser, for it almost always appears to them the wildest romance to be told that it is all done by birds. The species found in Lombeck is about the size of a small hen, and entirely of dark olive and brown tints. It is a miscellaneous feeder, devouring fallen fruits, earthworms, snails and centipedes; but the flesh is white and well-flavored when properly cooked."

The Megapodii are abundant in the Moluccas Islands, and most of the species visit the scrubby jungles along the seashore, where the soil is sandy, and there is a plentiful supply of the sticks, porous character. About fifteen or twenty cubic yards of earth and rock had been excavated, and on each side of this hole near the bottom was a ledge of rocks beneath which an excavation appears to have been made either naturally or by some wild animal forming a narrow cage which may penetrate into the inmost recesses of the mound. In this excavation two or several young men, one of whom especially attracted our attention as, with a pair of heavy buckskin glover, he would insecurely lay upon the watch, and now and then, reaching into the cavern as far as he could reach or get his body in, he would pull therefrom with his hands a large snake. Hundreds must have been killed in this way on Sunday—certainly too many while we were there to keep any accurate count, and being not a very warm day it was not a good day for snakes either. The den was discovered two years ago by a boy who called on Mr. Graves to the spot. He says that the ground was literally alive with them, and that he succeeded in killing three hundred in about half an hour. He said that to his knowledge almost 6,000 had already been killed at that spot; and it was proposed on Sunday next to call the neighbors together for several miles around and have a "snake bee" and a general extermination day, for which they would come prepared with materials and tools to insure success by excavation if necessary.

Mr. Wallace was himself the discoverer of a new species, named in his honor M. Wallacei. It inhabits the islands of Gilolo, Ternate and Bouro, and is said by him to be the handsomest bird of the genus, being richly banded with reddish-brown on the back and wings. It also differs from the other species in its habits—dwelling in the forests of the interior, and coming to the sea-beach to deposit its eggs. Instead of making a mound, the M. Wallacei burrows into the sand to the depth of about three feet obliquely downward, and deposits its eggs at the bottom. It then leisurely covers up the mouth of the hole, and is said by the natives to obliterate and disguise its own footmarks leading to and from the hole by making sundry other tracks and scratches in the neighborhood. It lays its eggs only at night; and at Bouro a bird was caught every one morning as it was coming out of the hole, on which several eggs were found. All these birds seem to be semi-nocturnal, for their loud, wailing cries may be constantly heard late into the night and long before daybreak in the morning. The eggs are all of a russy-red color, and very large for the size of the bird, being generally three or three and a quarter inches long by two or two and a quarter wide."

The species of Mound-Builder which is now at the Central Park, New York, is of a blackish-brown color, with the upper part of the neck a vermilion red, and its length from bill to end of tail is about fourteen inches. It is stated in Forest and Stream that this M. Pritchardii digs a hollow in the ground, between one and two feet in depth, and there lays about forty eggs, in the months of September and October. The observations of Mr. Motley, who has visited the haunts of this bird, regarding the period of incubation, are as follows: "Some eggs that had been buried in the sand for six weeks were found to contain merely the embryo of a chick, as much advanced as a hen's egg hatched four days." Mr. Motley buried some eggs that had been brought to him, in the sand, to the depth of about three feet, and in three weeks' time a young bird emerged, shook itself free of sand and ran away so fast that it was caught with difficulty. From the first it provided for itself, scratching up the earth like an old bird. In describing the Megapodius, Mr. Gill graphically remarks that "it reminds one of a hen that has lost her tail."—Chicago Tribune.

The Most Useful Animal.

It would seem to be about time for that class of theorists who proclaim that "the horse is the most useful of all animals, and also the most intelligent," to look into the merits of the statement somewhat. The quotation is neither new nor original. On the contrary, it is very old, so old that it is worn threadbare. The fact is, the horse is neither the most useful nor the most intelligent animal. Bornga cattle far surpass horses in usefulness, and the elephant is the superior of the horse in intelligence. With the intelligent-sagacity—clause of the statement, however, we do not now propose to deal. Let us see how horses, as a class, compare with cattle in point of utility.

Suppose one or the other race were destroyed. If the horse, then the ox would have to take his place as the draught animal, and it would be found to be no mean one. It is true our friends would not be filled with fast teams, rushing along at great speed, at the risk of life to pedestrians; cavaliers would not be lifted with fast and swift steeds. Moving teams and trains on roads would be limited to the speed of the patient ox; nevertheless, trade and travel would be as well, if not better accommodated, for steam would quickly be made available, and, in the end, transportation would probably be cheapened. Even under the existing state of things, it is more than probable that fully one-half the plowing and the whole labor of the farm performed by animal power is still done by other animal power than that of the horse. It is only among the more civilized Nations that the horse is generally used as a draught animal. Many others are oxen. Undoubtedly they might be used with profit, if the systematic agriculture is practiced, if it were not so fashionable to use horses. Many firstrate farmers know this, and greatly benefit themselves of this valuable labor. Those who feed their ox teams properly will find that plowing, that a family yoke of oxen will get over about as much work, day by day, as a team of horses. Here, as much depends on the feeding, training and handling of the team used. A team of horses kept on grass and hay alone will not do as much work as a team of oxen on the same keep. A team of smart oxen, kept on oats, will do as much plowing in a day as a team of horses, but they may have to work, perhaps, an hour a day longer to the it. But the time only can be said to give us—labor. This is a most valuable one, and industry could not very well do without it. Still the wheels of industry would not stand still if horses were swept out of existence. The value of cattle is of a manifold nature. The cow furnishes milk, and thereby curds, butter and cheese, the refuse from the manufactures feed hogs, and the latter fatten for pork, when it is done, meat and leather of the most valuable kind. According to the report of the Commissioner of Customs at Washington, the export of beef from the United States for 1877 was 21,527,242 pounds, worth $1,424,616. Of cheese there was exported 107,564,666 pounds, worth $12,700,627. The money value of the cows of the country is $450,000,000. To work the milk products $100,000,000 is required, and the total sum invested in the industry, quoted at $$\,$, is $$\,$, including $$\,$ in land used for pasturage, and hay and other feed. The export of fresh beef to England alone, from June 1 to Aug. 24, 1877, amounted to $7,061,695. The total number of horses in all North America, in 1876, was estimated at 9,501,280. If worth on an average $100 each—a large estimate—it would give $950,-020,080, or, only about $50,080,080 more than the investment in land necessary to feed the cows of the country.

We are unable to find the value of oxen for the latter for the same year, as go back to the Census of 1870. The total number of horses in the United States in that year was 8,300,219. The number of cattle was 25,016,282. The average steer at three years old is worth about that on the average unbroken colt at the same age. The reader can figure for himself as to the relative value of cattle and horses in the country at that time. Since then the scale has been turned largely in favor of neat cattle.

Let us now look at the value of swine, as against horses, in the United States. According to the Cincinnati Price Current, the total number of hogs packed and marketed in the United States and Canada was 12,201,388, of an aggregate net weight of 2,548,343,-011 pounds. At five cents per pound, this would aggregate $127,317,190.65. The whole number of swine in the United States on Jan. 1, 1870, according to statistics of the Department of Agriculture, was 32,262,000.

From the above will clearly be seen the vast interests involved in the live stock of the country, and that the horse, while holding a prominent place, is by no means first. Indeed, with the cattle stock of the country left intact, it is more than probable that the horse-stock of the country, if swept out of existence, would occasion less permanent distress than if even the swine of the country were destroyed. Cattle would at once largely take the place that horses now occupy as draught animals, and steam would at once be utilized. On the other hand, the destruction of cattle would at once cause an universal famine that could not be stayed.

In this we must not be understood as detracting anything from the value of horses to the human race and the business of the country. We could not well do without them. They fill their place in the economy of civilized and enlightened communities and Nations. Each individual breed has its place, just as each breed of other domestic animals gives its quota of support to the ever-increasing necessities of advancing civilization. All practical men know this. All is only theorists who catch at sensations, seeking to exaggerate or get local credit for astuteness, who run into these errors. Nevertheless the horse will continue to fill his valuable place in the economy of life. So will all other animals, even to the most insignificant of those which go to assist in the development of modern civilization. —Prairie Farmer.

Baltermeier's Hard Luck.

Joseph Baltermeier, an Austrian, about thirty-two years old, came up as a Banka, purely clad and travel stained, walked into Treasurer Gilfillan's office and asked for a loan from Pulaski County, Mo., about thirty miles below St. Louis, and has walked all the way to Washington. He had in his hand an envelope containing fragments of mutilated greenbacks, which he wanted, if possible, to have redeemed. Some time before he had a hole near a stove at home, and, for safe keeping, placed therein $215 in five-dollar greenbacks and National Bank-notes, all the money he had. The bugs in coming around the spot unearthed the pocket-book containing the money, and chewed and torn the notes into little bits. Upon discovering this, Baltermeier gathered together the pieces and tried to dispose of them in his neighborhood and in St. Louis. Unsuccessful there, he took up his march for Washington to see what he could do here. Treasurer Gilfillan examined the notes, and found that only two National Bank fives and two greenback fives—amounting to $20—could be recognized and redeemed. This amount was given him in exchange for his mutilated currency, and he went his way. In telling his story, Baltermeier records with tears flowing. This was all his money, he said, and he was buying a farm. A short time ago he had given an agent eighty dollars to enter his patent, but that before the loss of the $215 he had discovered that the agent had kept the money and had not entered the land. Washington Star.

Setting Tramps to Work.

Boston did something last winter toward settling the tramp question. In the winter of 1877, a spectator might have seen, on any pretty much any morning, a crowd of 150 or more of vagrants waiting around the Charlestonstreet Home for a penniless breakfast. These folks had a nice night in the beds of the various police-stations, and they were living regularly in this manner. Although the Overseers provided a pile of wood and somesaws, and then required every applicant to do two hours' work previous to receiving a meal. Some of the regular visitors thereupon marched off and were seen no more, saying that they hadn't fallen so low as to work for a meal. The number of vagrants soon fell off to about fifteen. When this last winter set in, the Overseers procured some 500 cords of wood from the city, and, for two days' work upon it, they gave the worker an order for two dollars' worth of provisions from a local grocer at wholesale prices. Then, finding that even at that rate the dealers were making a profit on the job of some 50 per cent., the city opened a store of its own at the Home, and delivered the articles bought. In this way the price, with all expenses added, did not cost two-thirds as much as under the old system at wholesale prices. The Overseers have succeeded admirably in relieving the really destitute, and at a cost of $20,000 less than the sum which they intended to keep up the wood-yard and the supply-store as permanent institutions.—Lowell (Mass.) Courier.

Your Local Paper.

Public-spirited citizens fully appreciate the necessity of supporting a good local paper, and will heartily endorse the following from the New York Times: "You might hardly as well forget your church, your academies and school houses, as to forget your local paper. It speaks to you times be-fallen your local minister does. It is read regularly each day from beginning to end. It reaches you all, and if it has a lower spirit and less wisdom than a sermon, it has a thousand times better chance at you. Long, as it does, so every table in almost every house, you owe it to yourselves to rally liberally to its support, and extract from it as able and high-toned a character as you do from an educator in your midst. It is in no sense beneath notice and care, unless you yourself are beneath notice and care, for it is your representative. Indeed, in its character, it is the enunciation of the importance, interest and welfare of you all. It is the aggregate of your own consequence, and you cannot ignore it without miserably depreciating yourselves."

AN EAST saumer a Detroiter had it standing order to pay $50 for proofs that cucumbers had ever caused a case of colic, but no proofs could be furnished. The same offer is now renewed.—Detroit Free Press.

SURE CATARRH CURE

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—Mr. Hallman avers: Take two potatoes exactly alike, cut one and plant the pieces near a warm stove for a few days; cut the other at planting and plant at the same time, and the dried pieces will be sure to come up before the others, and the growth from them will be stronger.

—An excellent furniture polish is made by mixing two parts of linseed oil with one of turpentine; shut most well rubbed in, and wiped dry, and is of course to be used only on oiled furniture; that which has been varnished may be washed with benzine to remove the grease, then treated to a fresh coat of varnish.—Prairie Farmer.

—Fowls, as well as animals and human beings, love occasionally to have condiments with their food. Cayenne pepper, mustard, or ginger, increases the vigor and egg production of fowls. This apparently artificial diet is needed by them about which birds get in their wild state—spiced berries, buds, etc. It is these that give wild fowl their peculiar "game flavor."

—Work on the farm deals with things that are hidden to the sight, and need to be carefully understood; and there is no other physical labor performed in the world that needs more to be guided by the light of the mind than the cultivation of the soil, the rearing of stock and the conversion of field produces into finished articles for sale, such, for instance, as butter, cheese, milk, etc.—Iowa State Register.

—The Live Stock Journal decides general questions as to cow food: "We have seen potatoes fed quite freely to cows with excellent result in quantity and quality of milk; but it is not fit or economical to feed largely of any one food. Potatoes fed in moderation are excellent for milk; but given in too great quantity they will reduce the yield. Cows and beasts must not be given too liberally; corn-fodder, given as a sole ration, is unprofitable; but fed with hay and meal will keep up the yield of milk and add largely to the profit of the season."

Every family, says the German-town Telegraph, should have a good supply of "herbs." They are easily gotten up; some of them are perennial, and require planting only once in several years. The seed can all be found at our agricultural and horticultural stores. The list is as follows: Sweet marjoram, marigold, thyme, winter and summer savory, sage, curiander, aniseed, rosemary, lavender, sweet basil, caraway, fennel, dill, hyssop, winter savory, fennel, lavender and sage are perennial; the others require the seed to be sown annually.

—Caledonia is a mixture of gluesizing and Paris white. The proportion is twenty pounds of the latter to one pound of glue, which should be dissolved in two or three quarts of boiling water, and the whiting should be placed in a pail, and the glue-size poured over it, and then diluted with warm water until about as thick as thin cream. It needs a little practice to know just what thickness to make it, and it is well to try a little before thinning it out too much. Calcimine can only be applied to walls that have had a finish upon them.—Country Gentleman.

—Hens have a sharp appetite for fresh animal food, and a habit of devouring nearly all kinds of insects that come in their way, hence they are also a valuable work in the garden and field-yard, if they would discriminate a little. Unfortunately they do not do well if between the rows, but when the scratchers begin to work on the rows of vegetables the case is altered. One of our neighbors has hit upon a plan for keeping his hens between the rows. He has constructed a coop twelve feet long and two feet wide, making it without a bottom, and covering the top, sides and ends with coarse wire netting. The coop is light and may be moved along between the rows of vegetables. The hens inside perform the parts of cultivators, horse-hoe, smoothing harrow and insect exterminator. This is not be an original design on the part of our neighbor, but he says that, next to tools, he likes to see hens in the garden. He keeps a light box at one end of the coop, to catch the eggs that the hens lay, as the result of the insect food which they procure scratching between the rows.—Poultry World.

Cultivation of Crops.

THE cultivation of crops is essential for many reasons. The principal one, however, as generally understood, is for the purpose of killing weeds. This, however, while of great importance, is not the same time not more essential than that the surface of the soil be kept thoroughly friable and in a well-pulverized state.

It is this thoroughly friable condition that enables the soil to absorb heat, and retain it with the least loss. It also allows free percolation of water, and if the subsoil be not impervious, this does not render the soil cold. It is evaporation by the sun's heat and dry air below that keeps a soil cold. A soil sodden from constant moisture cannot be warmed by the rays of the sun; in fact, such a soil, if shaded, retains its heat better than when not shaded, for one reason, from the fact that evaporation is neither so constant nor so strong.

The principal object, therefore, in the cultivation of what are usually denominated hoed crops, is to so keep the soil stirred as to render it always loose, friable and mellow, that the air heated by the rays of the sun may thoroughly permeate it. In planting some breaking of the roots after the plants have obtained vigor, is not injurious, since the cut surfaces immediately throw out additional feeding-roots: nevertheless, this plan of cultivation is one not to be commended, since cultivation should not be at a depth to reach the roots of the crop to any considerable extent.

The principal value in cultivation is while yet the plants are young. So far as corn is concerned, a light, sharp harrow is the best implement until the crop is strong enough so that the plants will bear the cultivator. Many persons will not use the harrow, for fear of tearing out the corn. If the soil is dry enough to work, and not more than ordinarily full of trash, little or no damage will be done, but the whole ground will be stirred and the weeds, just appearing above-ground, will be eradicated, so that the crop may easily be thereafter kept ahead of the weeds.

In the cultivation of garden crops, or all that class of plants of very delicate growth while young, the cultivation must of necessity be light near the plants. To attain this an implement must be used that will not cast earth, but simply move it. In this we have been most successful with an implement, with a thin cutting edge running vertically next to the plants, and the foot or horizontal side of which simply scarifies the soil; that is, lifts a shoe and drops it immediately behind, in a more or less pulverized state. A number of hand implements are now made on the plan of hoes, and which with care may be used within an eighth of an inch of the plants. Later, we have adopted the plan of using small plows, very long in the point and land side, to throw the earth toward the middle of the row. As it passes from between the plows, a winged narrow shovel catches the earth and spreads it smoothly back. In this way, a crop, where the rows are straight and of uniform width, one with the other, may be cultivated in the most perfect manner, and a root crop may be attained at a cost that will surprise those who have worked under the hoe and hand weeding system.—Prairie Farmer.

Mementoes of Bygone Black Hills Miners.

Mr. Witcher gave us an interesting account of the evidences recently found that men had gone into the Black Hills nines years ago, but never came out of them. Such accounts have been published in the Black Hills papers, but never elsewhere. In Rutabaga Gulch, between Deadwood and Bald Mountain, an old tunnel has been discovered, thirty feet into the side of the gulch, evidently made years ago. About forty miles above Deadwood an ancient stone cabin has been found, and evidence that it was built by a party of brave adventurers, who, satisfied of the richness of the country, boldly penetrated into the wilderness, braving the danger from Indians and the severe winters, and falling victims, most probably, to the former.

In other places broken picks have been dug up, from an evident burial of many years. The remains of what was evidently a long barricade have been found, the logs and trees in the vicinity being filled with leaden bullets; and the height of the least popular family medicine in the market. The reputation as a skillful surgeon and physician has been fully established for many years. Would physicians and clergy, after having tested his medicine thoroughly, unite in commending them, they defended, if they possessed merit? The undersigned take pleasure in recommending Dr. Pierce and his Family Medicines to all who may need them.

LUDLOW HAS AN INDIAN THEME.—Our readers will be interested in hearing from their old friend Captain Clifford, who is at his post out West, guarding the frontier. The Rocky Mountain Herbaldman gives the particulars of a raid made by a party of Indians upon the country adjacent to Camp Baker, and of an expedition by a squad of soldiers under Capt. Cliff of the light was short but fierce. two Indians were killed, and Capt Clifford was shot by two bullets. The dispatch says "An Messenger Spaulding came to us and Capt. Cliford's house, with seven and battle, going toward the pass, and boats are entrenched near the brave officer has been. A man at Watson's saw saw Clifford's horse pass and it was wounded. The firing was heard at Watson's. Clifford's party numbered only 25 soldiers and four citizens. Nine Indians were seen, the entire number is not known." A later dispatch announces Clifford's safety, and closes as follows: "Thus the bravery and energy of Capt. Clifford and his followers defeated the plans of the Indians, but one or more to the happy hunting grounds, and caused the other to flee in the country." Capt. Clifford is a letter to his brother here, states that one bullet grazed his lips, and another passed so close to his eyes to make the tears come, "probably," the Captain adds, humorously, "for my good looks." In a letter to the editor of this paper the Captain expresses the belief that they will have more sharp fighting soon, and promises to write us the particulars.

THE CRISIS.—Before this paper reaches all its readers the new iron bridge across Pine River at this place will be completed, and in use. The bridge and pier rests upon fifty hard wood piles, driven closely, and cut off two feet below low water mark. The pier upon which the iron table rests consists of a central sectional tube of boiler iron, sixteen feet in light, and four feet in diameter, surrounded by ten smaller tubes of the same material. These are filled with concrete and capped, and are braced in the strongest manner. Upon this rest the turn table, which is a masterpiece of strength and easy movement. The bridge proper is constructed principally of wrought iron truss work, substantially riveted, and strongly braced. At the center, on either side, the wrought iron posts to a height of twenty feet, and from the top of these to each extreme corner of the bridge are two rods, each 2 inches in diameter. The extreme height of the bridge is 127 feet, and the width of the road way 16 feet. On either side outside the truss work are side walks three feet wide, with a railing three feet high. The bridge has a capacity of sustaining twenty tons. A small boy will be able to swing it with the greatest ease. The Smith Bridge Company, of Toledo, Ohio, are the builders, and their work has been well done. Their reputation is richly deserved if their manner of doing work elsewhere is the same as has characterized their operations here.

The New York Tribune asks a pertinent question. Was the Democratic party sincere when it promised to leave this question to the Electoral Commission? Or was it only lying to gain time? Send this question to the Commission," the revolutionists seem to have said: "if it decides for us all right; if it decides against us, we will refuse to pay. That is the conduct of bullies and swindlers."

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 5th, to encourage and aid the higher education of the colored race in the District of Columbia and in the several States. The Pacific Railroad bill was taken up and debated. Several amendments were offered, but the bill were agreed to, among them being one having the franking privilege to the extent of allowing members of Congress, etc., to send free through the mails a written and printed communication not exceeding two and a half ounces in weight—20 to 19; the bill as amended was then passed—37 to 18. Mr. Matthews spoke a personal explanation, in which he emphatically denied that he was in any way connected, by participation or encouragement, in the perpetration of alleged frauds in the last Presidential election in Louisiana; he stated that Anderson had appealed to him for official patronage on the ground that Anderson had supported Mr. Hayes's honorable, lawful and efficient service to the Republican cause in Louisiana at a sacrifice of time and money, and at great personal risk, the only crime (if there was any) of which Anderson was conscious, was in having recommended to office a person who had meritoriously supported a wrong, but bad, as it appeared to the speaker, withdrawn from participation in the elections was reported from the Committee on Elections a resolution declaring that the contest in the second election in the Fifth Congressional district of South Carolina be laid on the table, and declaring the seat vacant; and a minority report declaring Mr. Smalls, the sitting member, entitled to the seat. The resolution was agreed to—yeas 32, nays 29. The House bill making appropriations, and passed as amended—166 to 7. Conference reports on the District of Columbia Government bill and on the Washington Monument were agreed to.

A RESOLUTION for the appointment of a Special Committee to inquire into the alleged frauds in connection with the late Presidential election was introduced and laid over. The proposed investigation was made by the Senate Investigating Committee, and introduced in the Senate on the 6th, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The bill to strengthen the foundation of the Washington Monument was passed. Messrs. Ingalls, Wilder and Jones, Fla., were at their own request excused from service on the Electoral Commission, and the vote granting it at request to Senator Davis was subsequently rescinded. Various appointments to the River and Harbor Appropriation bill were agreed to. A Conference Committee was organized on the Army Appropriation bill.

A VOTE of thanks was tendered by the House, for the report of the judicial claims for the prompt settlement of the same by Congress and for the better protection of the Treasury from Indian depredations. The Senate amendments to the Army Appropriation bill were concurred in, and a Conference Committee was appointed. The Civil Sundry Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole. At the ensuing session bills were passed—relating to the government and control of the United States in certain lands granted to the State of Michigan by the act of June 3, 1850; increasing suit to be brought in Kansas to set aside the Osage trust patents issued for any of the lands of the Black Hawk land of the Sioux Indians in the State of Minnesota; the question of title to enforce, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, the law providing that soldiers and sailors honorably discharged by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they possess the necessary capacity, with an amendment that the final preference be extended to enlisted men disabled in the line of duty and honorably discharged, or the widows or daughters of killed or deceased soldiers.

DOMESTIC.

MR. MORRELL, living near Dixon, Mo., on his return from the village, the other day, missed his two little girls, aged eight and five years, respectively. His attention was called by a large trunk in the room, and he opened it and found the lifeless forms of the little ones. They were cast resuscitation. It is supposed they jumped in the trunk, listening to give their father a pleasant surprise, but were overcome by the heat and lack of air.

THE International Typographical Union, at its late session, in Detroit, elected the following officers: President, John Armstrong, of Toronto, Can.; Vice-Presidents, Otis P. Martin, of Chicago, and T. J. Vaughn, of Richmond, Va.; Secretary and Treasurer, William White, of New York; Corresponding Secretary, Charles Wright, of Cincinnati. Washington was selected as the place for holding the next annual meeting.

ACCORDING to Boise City (Idaho) dispatches of the 9th, there was increasing excitement throughout the territory over the threatened, and in portions actual, uprising of the Indians. There had been a fight at Hall Creek between a small party of volunteers and a body of 150 savages, in which four of the former were killed, two wounded and one missing. Troops had been forwarded from San Francisco for their relief.

ON the 9th, a tornado passed over portions of Eastern and Middle Georgia, which resulted in the destruction of crops, fences and buildings and the loss of several lives. The Town of Curryttown, in South Carolina, just across the Georgia line, was almost literally swept from the face of the earth.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 10th says the adoption by the Senate and House of the conference report on the Washington Monument would secure the prompt completion of that structure.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

THE Greenback State Convention of Maine met at Lewiston, on the 8th, 887 delegates being present. The resolutions indorse the Toledo platform; declare fealty to the American monetary system; favor free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver, and the issuing by the Government of full legal-tender paper money, in amounts sufficient to meet the wants of trade; oppose every measure looking to resumption of specie payment, etc., etc.

THE New York National Greenback party met in State conference at Albany, on the 5th, twenty-eight counties being represented. Resolutions were adopted declaring that the greenback dollar must be a full legal-tender for all debts; that the General Government alone issue money; favoring the calling in of all United States bonds, and paying them, principal and interest, in greenbacks; demanding the suppression of imported Chinese labor, and the repeal of the Resumption and National Banking acts.

THE next Missouri Democratic State Convention will be held on the 10th of July, at Jefferson City.

THE Michigan Greenback and National parties held their State Conventions at Grand Rapids, on the 5th. A compromise was effected between the two parties in the evening, and a platform was adopted calling for the unconditional repeal of the National Banking and Resumption acts; the issue of all paper money to be a full legal-tender for all public and private debts; the free coinage of silver; reduction in the hours of labor; Government lands to be reserved for actual settlers only, etc. Hon. Henry S. Smith was nominated for Governor; Lysander Woodward for Lieutenant-Governor; Ira H. Reese for Secretary of State; H. E. Goeschel for Treasurer; Levi Sparks for Auditor; John A. Elder for Land Commissioner; Frank Dupont for Attorney-General; and David Parsons for Superintendent of Public Instruction.

THE Indiana State Republican Convention met at Indianapolis, on the 5th, and organized by the choice of Gen. Ben Harrison for Permanent President. The following nominations were made: Secretary of State, Judge Isaac S. Moore; Auditor of State, Gen. A. D. Miller; Treasurer of State, Maj. Geo. F. Bright; Attorney-General, Judge W. A. Babbitt; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Prof. J. T. Merrill. The resolutions adopted declare opposition to repudiation in any form; deprecate the abandonment or depreciation of greenbacks; favor a sound, stable currency of gold, silver and paper, made equal in value; recommend legislation authorizing the receipt of greenbacks at par for customs dues and Government bonds; oppose further financial legislation of a radical character; deprecate the payment of Southern claims; denounce the National House of Representatives for its action in arousing Republican members fairly and legally elected, and the action on the Democratic majority in their revolutionary attempts to unseat the President, etc., etc.

THE monument to ex-President Johnson was unveiled, at Greenville, Tenn., on the 8th, in the presence of about 3,000 spectators. The oration was delivered by Hon. Geo. W. Jones, an old-time friend of the dead President. The monument cost $5,000, and was erected by the family of the deceased.

THE Illinois State Prohibition Convention was held at Decatur, on the 6th. Hon. J. R. Goun was nominated for State Treasurer, and Rev. W. S. Post for Superintendent of Public Instruction. The platform demands the legal prohibition in all places, subject to the laws of Congress, of the importation, exportation, manufacture and traffic of and in all alcoholic beverages;" equal rights for all; the abolition of polygamy, etc.; the abolition of Executive patronage, etc., etc.

THE Missouri State Prohibition Convention met at St. Louis, on the 6th, and adopted a platform demanding that the sale of intoxicating liquors be absolutely prohibited by law; recommending persistent efforts to prevent the granting of licenses; urging good men of all parties to vote only for those favoring prohibition. A State Central Committee was chosen and authorized to nominate a State ticket, if deemed advisable.

THE President has approved the act to repeal the Bankrupt law.

A PORTLAND (Ore.) dispatch of the 9th says the Republican State ticket has been undoubtedly elected, but that the Democrats had secured the Member of Congress and the Legislature on joint ballot.

ON the 10th, Senator Matthews was served with a subpœnaby a Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, commanding him to appear before the Potter Investigating Committee, and testify concerning certain alleged irregularities. A Washington telegram of that date says it was understood that Mr. Matthews would insist upon his Senatorial privilege and decline obedience to the summons.

THOMAS WINANS, the Baltimore millionaire, died at his summer residence in Newport, R. I., on the 10th, of pulmonary consumption. He was fifty-eight years old and was worth $50,000,000.

A NEW YORK special of the 10th says the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church had, that evening, adopted a resolution recommending the expulsion of Mrs. Tilton from the Church membership.

FOREIGN.

AT Berlin, on the 5th, a decree was promulgated, signed by the Emperor Wilhelm and countersigned by Bismarck, proclaiming a Regency and nominating Prince Frederick Wilhelm as Regent. The condition of the Emperor was improving, and the wounds in his head and arm were healing. His speedy recovery was confidently expected. At the first fire, seven shot were lodged in the right forearm and wrist and five in the head and face. The second fire caused the lodgement of twenty shot in the arm and shoulder and six in the neck.

ACCORDING to Berlin telegrams of the 6th, the Criminal Court of that city were in the receipt of threatening letters declaring that other assassinations of European monarchs would follow if Nobeling was harshly treated.

AUSTRIA has notified Montenegro that the annexation of Antivari would be considered casus belli.

THE Pope has sent an appeal to the Powers to protect the interests of Roman Catholics while regulating the affairs of Turkey.

ACCORDING to Berlin dispatches of the 8th, Nobeling had, on that day, again attempted suicide, but had been prevented by the guards. Between twenty and thirty persons had been arrested in various parts of the Empire for expressing regret that Nobeling did not kill the Emperor.

NEARLY 300 lives were lost, on the 7th, by a fire-damp explosion in the Lancashire (Eng.) District.

LORD BEACONSFIELD left London for Berlin, on the 8th, to attend the sittings of the Congress.

THE Porte has surrendered the Fortress of Shumla. Both Russia and Germany intimated that, if the surrender were not made, invitations to the European Congress would be withheld.

ON the 8th, at Berlin, eight persons were tried for disloyal speech concerning the Emperor. In one case sentence was deferred, and in seven, sentences of imprisonment were imposed, ranging from eighteen months to five years.

AN official telegram of the 8th announces the surrender of the remainder of the Cuban insurgents and the complete pacification of the whole island.

ACCORDING to Rome (Italy) dispatches of the 10th, the Pope had proposed co-operation with Germany for the repression of Socialism on condition that the Falk Ecclesiastical laws were modified.

THE Shah of Persia reached Paris, on the 10th.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Prof. H. R. Palmer returned to New York, May 28, from his European tour.

—The present of Sec'y Sherman to his niece who married Senator "Don" Cameron was a check for $3,000.

—Mr. Spofford, the Congressional Librarian, says that not one member out of ten makes any use of the Congressional Library. Under the rules of the library public officers are the only ones allowed to draw books, and as a necessary consequence the use of the great library is very much restricted.

—Hon. Thomas M. Marshall, of Pittsburgh, while trying a case at Beaver, Pa., recently, was handed a note by a man named Cameron, inviting him to mortal combat with columbiads, ten paces apart. He had been annoyed by the same man several times before, Cameron is supposed to be insane. He was formerly a lawyer, and was at one time Governor of Kansas, under President Buchanan's administration.

—The late Prof. Henry, so Thatcher Wood states, was in 1835 an amateur actor of note, to whom a good engagement had been offered if he would adopt the dramatic profession. The Principal of the Albany Academy, however, offered him a gratuitous academic course, and, his master surrendering the apprentice's indentures, Henry turned his back on the theatre to leave a more enduring and a wider fame as a scientist.

—The Washington Star, speaking of the late Prof. Henry's high record of honor, says: "He is known to have received hundreds of propositions by which, for the use of his name in the inducement of mining projects and other projects, he could have made himself wealthy; but they uniformly met with prompt and indignant rejection, even where the schemes had a sufficient degree of merit to make them fair business operations."

—Judge John M. Wilson, who has been called the father of the practice in Cook County, Ill., and who for many years was side by side presiding Judge of the Cook County Court of Common Pleas, and was afterward Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Chicago, was worth between three and four hundred thousand dollars two years ago, but has lost all that property from shrinkage in the value of real estate and stocks, and as a means of support in his old age has accepted the appointment of Justice of the Peace for North Chicago.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A FARMER named Noschor, residing in Jasper, Midland County, came in from work early, the other morning, complaining that he was not feeling well. His wife mixed him up a drink of vinegar and water, and fifteen minutes after drinking it Noschor was dead. The stomach has been sent to Ann Arbor for medical examination.

AT the last meeting of the Board of Regents, in April, Regent Cutchen was instructed to request Senator Christiancy, former counsel of the Board, to make a written statement as to the truth or falsity of the affidavit of R. A. Beal, read at the January meeting of the Regents. Beal then swore that he had been induced to withdraw his claims for a jury in the University chancery suit upon the representation of Senator Christiancy that there was no evidence in the case by which Judge Buhington would be authorized to find that any red lines or initial "D's" were forged, and that, in case he should so find, Christiancy would make a representation of the facts to the Board, by which he (Beal) would be relieved in the premises. President Angell has received a reply from Christiancy, in which he denies in toto the whole statement, and declares that other assassinations of European public men would follow if Nobeling was harshly treated.

AUSTRIA has notified Montenegro that the annexation of Antivari would be considered casus belli.

THE Pope has sent an appeal to the Powers to protect the interests of Roman Catholics while regulating the affairs of Turkey.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—At Nelson Furnace, Ky., recently, a girl eleven years old was attacked by a game cock, which struck one of its spurs through the side of her head and into the brain, inflicting a fatal wound.

—At the organ concert in the Cincinnati Music Hall lately, just as Miss Cary emerged from a side door to sing, a bolt came out and ran across the broad stage in full view of the audience. Miss Cary after taking her place saw the accident, shook her fan and called "Scat!" at it, much to the amusement of the audience. At last puss was driven off and the singer went on with her singing.

—Last week two residents of Bull Run Basin disagreed. W. ejected J. from his cabin. The latter then returned to his own apartments. Next morning, taking his double-barrel shotgun, he proceeded to the whereabouts of W. and told him to feel himself, for he must make an apology or fight. W. replied that he did not know of his prowlings, and he had no gun. "However, you just step off ten steps and take a shot at me, then I'll take a turn at you with the other barrel." J. walked away.—Pioneer (Nev.) Power.

—At Sunny Point, Panola County, Tex., on Monday last, two negro children, one the infant and the other about two years of age, were killed and eaten by a sow. The parents left the children in charge of a girl seven years of age, and while the girl was playing in the yard the sow entered the house and seized the infant lying in the cradle and dragged it out. Before assistance could reach the house the animal had killed the infant and eaten its brains, and had attacked and eaten off a leg and arm of the oldest child. The latter lived some five or six hours after the discovery.—Galveston (Texas) Christian News.

—Alex. Sliey and Frost Gorman, brothers-in-law, living near Forest Depot, Va., got into a quarrel, the other day, about the latter's wife, during which, in the field, Cole's called Sliey a liar. The latter challenged him to mortal combat, and the following weapons were chosen. There being no persons on the place to act as second in the struggle outside, an old negro man, a laborer on the farm, was pressed into the service, and made to become an unwilling witness to the strange deed. The boys were directed to go to and participate whenever either one of the two combatants took an advantage of the other. Sliey and Gorman were men of herculean strength, and the struggle was a close one, lasting nearly an hour. After the first few lunges Coles received a painful wound in the upper part of his forearm, but, instead of disabling him, only seemed to madden him, and he pressed his antagonist more closely, inflicting three wounds in Sliey's breast. At this juncture the old negro implored the combatants, with tears in his eyes, to desist. Both combatants refused to listen, and the fight continued until both of the men fell, mutually wounded.

—An exciting scene occurred in a St. Louis criminal court the other day. Mrs. Gormley had been arrested for killing a man named Ryan, and had secured a continuance under bail. Gormley walked out of the court room followed by the mother of his victim. She approached him, and with a lithesome glare, rendered still more horrible by her one eye, said, clasping him by the shoulder: "You have killed my son! You have killed my son! May God's curse follow you!" Gormley shoved her back, exclaiming, "You lie, you lie." Recovering herself, the old woman placed her hand in her bosom, saying, "I'll be revenged." Gormley exclaimed, "She's going to murder me! She has got a knife!" Officers Doyle and Pierce, for selling a lottery, seized Mrs. Ryan, the former cutting his fingers on a sharp instrument concealed in the woman's bosom. The knife was drawn out, and a formidable weapon it was with a blade six inches long, which had been whetted to a keen edge. "He killed my son! He killed my son!" the old woman kept shrieking long after she was taken down stairs and placed in a cell.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

When them art by.
I love thee, but I love thee not so deeply,
And I am alone.
I marvel that I love thee so cheaply.

Thy smile and frown,
Thy chance, thy walk,
In vain regret I pursue and remember.
All's cold!
Round the year
I June sould the darkness of December.

Ah, cruel fate!
That I'd see late
We learn the golden value of our pleasure—
To find we know
How loss my worth it was to have our treasure.

Perverse are we.
Too blind to see
That idle memories only lead to sorrow,
Enjoy to-day,
Take care to-day;
Why want until to-day becomes to-morrow?
—Good Words

CROSSING THE RIVER.

Murmurs the soldier in dying,
As the death-wave the tired spirit frees,
"Let us all cross o'er the river,
And rest in the shade of the trees."

Ah! could we cross o'er that river,
And rest in the shade of those trees,
Refreshed by repose and green stronger
Come back to our struggle again!

How glad for a while to be resting
Beneath their thick waters roar,
Are the fevers of life and its passions,
That gnaw on the furthermost shore!

What is the destiny waiting
Those other side of that shadowy deep?
Some rest and repose for the spirit,
Or the gloom of eternal sleep?

None who have passed that river
Have ever come back to tell us,
Hence we have sought slumber or ease.

Nevertheless, forever
Across the dreary tide they go,
The bravest and best together—
Together the sick and the low.

Then in the battle's thickest carnage,
And fain to their rules go the rich,
The few who linger in the palace,
And the many who die in the ditch.

Those who leave reason their story
High in the prime of their manhood,
And those who have lived without glory,
And left us not even a name.

Those whom we long for their goodness,
And those whom we hated for crime,
All pass o'er those fitful waters,
Out of sight, out of mind, out of time.

Plunging in hast and in darkness,
Where all things are equal and even,
They cross the myste'rious river,
And leave the world's business to us.

COURTESY AT HOME.

There is an element about most excellence which is more or less disheartening. They are surrounded by an atmosphere which impresses the observer with assumptions of superiority, and which, though there may be a certain number of conformists. In our opinion the best test of the difference between courtesy and insolence will be found in the observation of home life. Humbug may assume the form of courtesy, but it cannot stand the scrutiny of continual use; whereas true courtesy becomes more developed by constant habit, and thrives best in its native soil. People who are profuse courtesy with humbug, because they imagine that it necessarily implies personal esteem and respect, are, we fear, mistaken; they only serve a deferential manner in the absence of personal esteem and respect, they unwittingly pay respect bunting. In this they are mistaken. Humbugging men be perfectly courteous to the murderer whom he is sentencing to be hanged, and the humbugging parson, at a public school may show formal politeness to his pupils in the disciplinary interviews which he has with them; but courtesy is not neither functionary would therefore lay himself open to the charge of being a humbug. Then there are persons who are utterly devoid of any innate courtesy that they are incredulous of its existence in others; and, when they are brought in contact with it, they humbug. It must be admitted, however, that there are occasions when skepticism is quite legitimate. For instance, when a man who has been guilty of want of affection and respect on the part of husbands toward their wives, or parents toward their children in public, we are apt to form our own opinion of their private life, shrewdly suspecting that the politeness and good things it had nobody whose apparent courteousness to strangers is only on the surface, and who thus seems to be that which he is not, run he a perfect experiment in the highest sense of the word; but, taking the expression in its ordinary social acceptation, we fear it requires to be granted that, in the matter of courtesy, a great many gentlemen do occasionally seem to be that which they are not. These refined beings do not stops at lapses into absolute rudeness among their relatives and intimates; but they replace their attractive manner by an air of acerbity, taciturnity, and irritability, which exceed the border line of courtesy. They seem to take a pleasure in demonstrating the unhappy results of the refinement of the agreeable has its counterpart in the refinement of the disagreeable. Sometimes have seen people comparing the manners of the present generation very unfavorable with those of its predecessors, and they do this with considerable justice; but we have known gentlemen of the old school, as it be termed, who, though very courteous in rough society, were accustomed to use some very ugly words in the company of their own sex. Perhaps they could quote poetry far more readily than some of their descendants, and they were always prepared with a line from Homer or Virgil to suit the occasion; but, for all that, their mental daily bread, especially after dinner, consisted of every coarse kind of food, and their associates would scarcely be tolerated in the club smoking-room of the present day. There are a few specimens of this school still left, and they are generally ostentatiously polite in society. Their drawing-room manners toward ladies are almost too fine, but their elderly spinster daughters, who have to attend upon them at home, especially in their gouty moments, could testify how much they are not always so affable. We have in our minds old military men, but there is a more solemn class of ancients who enjoy an equal reputation for courtesy. We refer to the race of old-fashioned college dons. These worthies could be the best boats in the world, and nothing could exceed the charms of their cheerful bonhomie; but we recollect the time when we used to compare the sanity which they annually exhibited to their visitors at Commemoration with their conduct toward ourselves during the rest of the year. The breakfast and luncheons in "gaudy week" were all very well, but the private interviews at other times in the Dean's study were by no means feasts of courtesy.

Although we cherish a conservative respect for the old-fashioned polished gentleman, we have a lurking suspicion that he is rather retarding the progress of social creature. Polished he certainly was, but with a polish that were oft with the rough usage, and which but tainly glossed over an inner man whose coldness of refinement to the point of positive rudeness, but he could also be very blandiloquous; and, if he was occasionally poetical, he was often indecent. We are far from maintaining that some past periods of English history have not been more distinguished for courtesy than our own; but when we hear people talk of the times of George IV. and Beau Brummel as the millennium of British politesse, we feel that either their memory or their judgment must be wrong. Even in person on the place to act as second in the struggle outside, an old negro man, a laborer on the farm, was pressed into the service, and made to become an unwilling witness to the strange deed. The boys were directed to go to and participate whenever either one of the two combatants took an advantage of the other. Sliey and Gorman were men of herculean strength, and the struggle was a close one, lasting nearly an hour. After the first few lunges Coles received a painful wound in the upper part of his forearm, but, instead of disabling him, only seemed to madden him, and he pressed his antagonist more closely, inflicting three wounds in Sliey's breast. At this juncture the old negro implored the combatants, with tears in his eyes, to desist. Both combatants refused to listen, and the fight continued until both of the men fell, mutually wounded.

—An exciting scene occurred in a St. Louis criminal court the other day. Mrs. Gormley had been arrested for killing a man named Ryan, and had secured a continuance under bail. Gormley walked out of the court room followed by the mother of his victim. She approached him, and with a lithesome glare, rendered still more horrible by her one eye, said, clasping him by the shoulder: "You have killed my son! You have killed my son! May God's curse follow you!" Gormley shoved her back, exclaiming, "You lie, you lie." Recovering herself, the old woman placed her hand in her bosom, saying, "I'll be revenged." Gormley exclaimed, "She's going to murder me! She has got a knife!" Officers Doyle and Pierce, for selling a lottery, seized Mrs. Ryan, the former cutting his fingers on a sharp instrument concealed in the woman's bosom. The knife was drawn out, and a formidable weapon it was with a blade six inches long, which had been whetted to a keen edge. "He killed my son! He killed my son!" the old woman kept shrieking long after she was taken down stairs and placed in a cell.

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

When them art by.
I love thee, but I love thee not so deeply,
And I am alone.
I marvel that I love thee so cheaply.

Thy smile and frown,
Thy chance, thy walk,
In vain regret I pursue and remember.
All's cold!
Round the year
I June sould the darkness of December.

Ah, cruel fate!
That I'd see late
We learn the golden value of our pleasure—
To find we know
How loss my worth it was to have our treasure.

Perverse are we.
Too blind to see
That idle memories only lead to sorrow,
Enjoy to-day,
Take care to-day;
Why want until to-day becomes to-morrow?
—Good Words

CROSSING THE RIVER.

Murmurs the soldier in dying,
As the death-wave the tired spirit frees,
"Let us all cross o'er the river,
And rest in the shade of the trees."

Ah! could we cross o'er that river,
And rest in the shade of those trees,
Refreshed by repose and green stronger
Come back to our struggle again!

How glad for a while to be resting
Beneath their thick waters roar,
Are the fevers of life and its passions,
That gnaw on the furthermost shore!

What is the destiny waiting
Those other side of that shadowy deep?
Some rest and repose for the spirit,
Or the gloom of eternal sleep?

None who have passed that river
Have ever come back to tell us,
Hence we have sought slumber or ease.

Nevertheless, forever
Across the dreary tide they go,
The bravest and best together—
Together the sick and the low.

Then in the battle's thickest carnage,
And fain to their rules go the rich,
The few who linger in the palace,
And the many who die in the ditch.

Those who leave reason their story
High in the prime of their manhood,
And those who have lived without glory,
And left us not even a name.

Those whom we long for their goodness,
And those whom we hated for crime,
All pass o'er those fitful waters,
Out of sight, out of mind, out of time.

Plunging in hast and in darkness,
Where all things are equal and even,
They cross the myste'rious river,
And leave the world's business to us.
—James Jones, English, in Harper's Weekly.

COURTESY AT HOME.

There is an element about most excellence which is more or less disheartening. They are surrounded by an atmosphere which impresses the observer with assumptions of superiority, and which, though there may be a certain number of conformists. In our opinion the best test of the difference between courtesy and insolence will be found in the observation of home life. Humbug may assume the form of courtesy, but it cannot stand the scrutiny of continual use; whereas true courtesy becomes more developed by constant habit, and thrives best in its native soil. People who are profuse courtesy with humbug, because they imagine that it necessarily implies personal esteem and respect, are, we fear, mistaken; they only serve a deferential manner in the absence of personal esteem and respect, they unwittingly pay respect bunting. In this they are mistaken. Humbugging men be perfectly courteous to the murderer whom he is sentencing to be hanged, and the humbugging parson, at a public school may show formal politeness to his pupils in the disciplinary interviews which he has with them; but courtesy is not neither functionary would therefore lay himself open to the charge of being a humbug. Then there are persons who are utterly devoid of any innate courtesy that they are incredulous of its existence in others; and, when they are brought in contact with it, they humbug. It must be admitted, however, that there are occasions when skepticism is quite legitimate. For instance, when a man who has been guilty of want of affection and respect on the part of husbands toward their wives, or parents toward their children in public, we are apt to form our own opinion of their private life, shrewdly suspecting that the politeness and good things it had nobody whose apparent courteousness to strangers is only on the surface, and who thus seems to be that which he is not, run he a perfect experiment in the highest sense of the word; but, taking the expression in its ordinary social acceptation, we fear it requires to be granted that, in the matter of courtesy, a great many gentlemen do occasionally seem to be that which they are not. These refined beings do not stops at lapses into absolute rudeness among their relatives and intimates; but they replace their attractive manner by an air of acerbity, taciturnity, and irritability, which exceed the border line of courtesy. They seem to take a pleasure in demonstrating the unhappy results of the refinement of the agreeable has its counterpart in the refinement of the disagreeable. Sometimes have seen people comparing the manners of the present generation very unfavorable with those of its predecessors, and they do this with considerable justice; but we have known gentlemen of the old school, as it be termed, who, though very courteous in rough society, were accustomed to use some very ugly words in the company of their own sex. Perhaps they could quote poetry far more readily than some of their descendants, and they were always prepared with a line from Homer or Virgil to suit the occasion; but, for all that, their mental daily bread, especially after dinner, consisted of every coarse kind of food, and their associates would scarcely be tolerated in the club smoking-room of the present day. There are a few specimens of this school still left, and they are generally ostentatiously polite in society. Their drawing-room manners toward ladies are almost too fine, but their elderly spinster daughters, who have to attend upon them at home, especially in their gouty moments, could test

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 21, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

Although the sad event has been postponed longer than was expected every one ed. Mr. William Cullen Bryant's death early on the morning of Wednesday the 12th, was justified the brief outlines contained in my letter of two weeks since. The disease of hardly any gave he sank in this country could have elicited such a unanimous and spontaneous tribute to his memory and achievement as that which has filled the press since the news of the aged poet's death arrive. The city flags were ever half mast ed until the whole city seemed to unite in testifying to the universal respect felt for one of the most upright and blameless of men.

Mr. Bryant's career was an exceptional one. A precocious genius, famous when he entered his teens, and doing his best work before he was out of them, he still preserved his high fame through nearly two thirds of a century thereafter. Although as his partners confess, he was not a business man, still he accumulated a large fortune and maintained it to the end with great frugality. Although slight and rather delicate of frame, his abundant exercise and regular habits kept him in the condition and health of an athlete and rose almost up to the week of his death. At seventy-five he astonished a friend while walking with him in the grounds of his country residence on Long Island, by running a short distance in advance, jumping easily into the branches of an overhanging tree and swinging for some time by one hand. When in the city he walked up and down town every day, rain or shine, and was always one of the most conspicuous figures on the street. The last time I saw Mr. Bryant was one morning not many weeks ago as he was coming down Broadway to his office as usual. His pace was of course not rapid but in his step were much of the firmness and agility of youth. His sharp blue eyes looked out undimmed from beneath a pair of bushy brows, as snow white as the long full beard and silky hair framing the strong features with which his portraits have familiarized it, and his whole appearance so striking and attractively remarkable that many of the passers by involuntarily turned to look after him as he went.

Your readers are probably aware that pretty nearly everything as to be found in one shape or another in this City of New York; but I venture to say that a majority of them would really be surprised to hear that there is a regular gold mine in operation in the very heart of the town. Such however, is the fact, and anyone curious to inspect the modes and processes by which a great proportion of the precious metal has been got out of the soil of the Pacific slope can have that curiosity gratified without going farther West than the corner of Broadway and Bond street. Here, a year and a half ago, occurred the great fire in which a number of jewelry and silver manufactories were burned. In these buildings as in those of the banks there must have been, outside of the dozen safes which were afterwards recovered, nearly two hundred thousand dollars worth, of the precious metals, only a small portion of which was immediately recovered. The remainder was scattered, in broken and blackened fragments, through the eighteen hundred tons of charred rubbish which lay piled in the cellars of the burned buildings when the smouldering fires were at last extinguished. During the first few months after the catastrophe the surface of this rubbish was a good deal picked over by the street urchins and quite a good deal taken out. Recently, two experienced miners obtained the necessary permission from Messrs. Robbins and Appleton, the owners of the building, to work the great ash heap systematically. They put in a thousand dollars worth of machinery and have now been delving, sluicing and cradling in true miner fashion for several weeks. The two men are able to wash about thirty tons of the rubbish a day, and thus far report as to pan out about eleven dollars a ton. During most of the day the work of the grimy pair thirty feet below the sidewalk is watched by a crowd of idlers and strangers who look down upon the belongings as one with eager and curious curiosity.

To absorb the dime novel would probably seem to the average Young American a more serious and revolutionary invasion of rights than the appropriation of the habeas corpus, and yet if they have to be done. Within a short time there have been quite a number of cases reported in which boys who had been reading about beauty and pirates until they became convinced that they had a special mission to become one or the other here in consequence for three selves long scrapes of various descriptions. Half a dozen or more of these recent adventurers have, within a month or two, been intercepted by the police on their way either to the Java Seas or the roaring main and returned to homes in the city and Brooklyn from which they had run away with the firm intention of achieving desperate and heroic deeds. Most of them, when thus heard, had no personal in the way of luggage or money, but in not one of the cases reported was the prime necessity, a revolver, wanting. In none of the instances above cited did it however we say more serious damage accomplished than the alarm of the parents concerned and some unnecessary searching work ed by the said parties. It is to be hoped that the young desperadoes generally preferred taking meals off the mantel piece for a few days after their return.

In the latest case of this kind, however, the work of this red Fra Diavolo was more tragical. A ten headed high wayman who had run away from home and with some kindred spirits had for some days been living in a cave in the suburbs, sallied forth from his hiding place one night, and meeting a young man who resisted his demands for money, locked up his claims by shooting his victim dead. He was arrested, tried, and early last week was sentenced to eight years in State's prison. When questioned by the Judge as to the cause of his crime he admitted that he had been led to it by the current sensational boy's literature, but expressed no regret, and seemed to regard his conviction and sentence merely as a proper and enjoyable part of the drama in which he was the hero.

THE INVESTIGATION.

On the 4th, the cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was undertaken by Mr. Reed, it being understood that he would confine himself exclusively to the consideration of the matters between his testimony and the statements heretofore made before the Senate Investigating Committee. The witness stated that he purposely misled the Senate Committee, but that his later statements were made on a level basis. He repeated the details of the interview with Secretary Sherman in the St. Louis restaurant, but the narrative showed no material or notable discrepancy. The cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was not concluded when the Committee adjourned.

On the 5th, the returns of the Electoral College of Louisiana were received from the Secretary of the Senate, and read. The Committee then adjourned to give the members an opportunity to vote on the Wood Tariff bill. Upon reassembling, Mr. Butler offered a resolution, which was a modified version of the President's message, and the originals of letters received by him from Mr. Matthews, and copies of letters sent to Mr. Matthews in relation to an appointment for James E. Anderson, Gen. C. Putnam was sworn in relation to the Louisiana Electoral returns, and stated that the papers in the hands of the Committee were the only ones in his possession. He had heard that the Republican Sub-Committee of the Senate had a record of the proceedings of the Louisiana Returning Board. The cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was resumed. In the course of the examination the following letter was read, the former had said he had written it to Mr. Matthews, and that he understood that he (Mr. Matthews) asking for an appointment for Anderson, and that Anderson was a witness for Mr. Matthews in the Louisiana matters, but he had not obtained it for Mr. Matthews, and that Mr. Matthews was a witness for him in the Louisiana matters, but Anderson declined to accept the appointment, which was tendered him by the President, and which he (Anderson) understood was given to Mr. Matthews, though the writing of the body of the letter and the suggestions were an exact counterpart of his handwriting. The witness was examined in relation to the re-enactment and attaching to the signing of the agreement, and made several other statements as to various points. The testimony of the Sub-Committee was handed witness for identification. He thought it was the same, but would not state positively under oath; witness also produced a letter from Mr. Jenks to him, in which reference was made to a letter from Mr. Hall, which he explained to mean "Sherman to Don." Witness further said that he had written a memorandum of letters sent to Matthews, in regard to the Pitkin appointment. Anderson said it was sought, on behalf of Pitkin securing him that, if he stood by the party, he would be provided for. In respect to the statement on its letter that three of the Returning Board did not sign the returns for Hayes, he said that the statement was made to him that Burch, Marks and Levissee had voted in blank, and that their names had been forged to the Electoral count, and he has found out, otherwise, that there was a great deal of truth in it. D. Gray (one of Packard's friends) had told him of their Packard overthrown; they would support Hayes and the whole Republican party. Mr. Pressly, the Associate Agent of the Associated Press, testified that he had in possession certain papers relating to the Louisiana election, but that was after the adjournment of Congress, he had sent them to Hon. Secretary of State of Louisiana, and had never heard from them since. The Committee were quite anxious to get possession of the papers, and soon after adjourned.

The investigation into the alleged Florida and Louisiana frauds was continued on the 9th. Mr. Cox announced that he had received from Mr. Matthews the originals of the correspondence between him and Mr. Anderson, which he had made. These were supported in Mr. Anderson's testimony. Mr. Cox suggested that all these papers be printed with the testimony. A resolution was adopted inviting Mr. Matthews to appear before the Committee, to explain the letters.

Judge Black, of Ohio, was then heard upon the details of the proposition which Asher made to him, and substantially stated that he offered from $30,000 to $40,000 if he would refuse to testify in the Congressional investigation, and to plead, in substance, "I don't see that the Louisiana matters have to do with Florida. From what he (Asher) was going to testify he (Judge Black) could see that his testimony would be valuable to the Democratic party, and he refused to accept the proposition. Asher then introduced to Hermann, a New Orleans broker, who informed him that $30,000 was his limit, where upon the matter fell through, and was not worth while to talk more on the matter. He had not been invited, and voted for Hayes and Wheeler. Witness said a portion of the returns laid before the Committee by the Secretary of the Senate were forgeries.

From 11 a. m. until 3 p. m., on the 9th, the Investigating Committee sat with closed doors, the time being occupied in the examination of the documents in evidence before the Committee, including the alleged forged Louisiana returns.

A subpœna duces tecum was ordered issued to the Appointment Clerk of the Treasury for all communications for the appointment of Anderson a Cowler, and the Secretary of State was requested to furnish the Committee with all original communications on file in his office pertaining to the case. One or two of the members of the Hayes-Sherman Commission figured in the correspondence, and were sent for in relation to the Louisiana Electoral returns, and stated that the papers in the hands of the Committee were the only ones in his possession. He had heard that the Republican Sub-Committee of the Senate had a record of the proceedings of the Louisiana Returning Board. The cross-examination of Mr. Anderson was resumed. In the course of the examination the following letter was read, the former had said he had written it to Mr. Matthews, and that he understood that he (Mr. Matthews) was asking for an appointment for Anderson, and that Anderson was a witness for Mr. Matthews in the Louisiana matters, but he had not obtained it for Mr. Matthews, and that Mr. Matthews was a witness for him in the Louisiana matters, but Anderson declined to accept the appointment, which was tendered him by the President, and which he (Anderson) understood was given to Mr. Matthews, though the writing of the body of the letter and the suggestions were an exact counterpart of his handwriting. The witness was examined in relation to the re-enactment and attaching to the signing of the agreement, and made several other statements as to various points. The testimony of the Sub-Committee was handed witness for identification. He thought it was the same, but would not state positively under oath; witness also produced a letter from Mr. Jenks to him, in which reference was made to a letter from Mr. Hall, which he explained to mean "Sherman to Don." Witness further said that he had written a memorandum of letters sent to Matthews, in regard to the Pitkin appointment. Anderson said it was sought, on behalf of Pitkin securing him that, if he stood by the party, he would be provided for. In respect to the statement on its letter that three of the Returning Board did not sign the returns for Hayes, he said that the statement was made to him that Burch, Marks and Levisee had voted in blank, and that their names had been forged to the Electoral count, and he has found out, otherwise, that there was a great deal of truth in it. D. Gray (one of Packard's friends) had told him of their Packard overthrown; they would support Hayes and the whole Republican party. Mr. Pressly, the Associate Agent of the Associated Press, testified that he had in possession certain papers relating to the Louisiana election, but that was after the adjournment of Congress, he had sent them to Hon. Secretary of State of Louisiana, and had never heard from them since. The Committee were quite anxious to get possession of the papers, and soon after adjourned.

The investigation into the alleged Florida and Louisiana frauds was continued on the 9th. Cox announced that he had received from Mr. Matthews the originals of the correspondence between him and Mr. Anderson, which he had made. These were supported in Mr. Anderson's testimony. Mr. Cox suggested that all these papers be printed with the testimony. A resolution was adopted inviting Mr. Matthews to appear before the Committee, to explain the letters.

Judge Black, of Ohio, was then heard upon the details of the proposition which Asher made to him, and substantially stated that he was offered from $30,000 to $40,000 if he would refuse to testify in the Congressional investigation, and to plead, in substance, "I don't see that the Louisiana matters have to do with Florida. From what he (Asher) was going to testify he (Judge Black) could see that his testimony would be valuable to the Democratic party, and he refused to accept the proposition. Asher then introduced to Hermann, a New Orleans broker, who informed him that $30,000 was his limit, where upon the matter fell through, and was not worth while to talk more on the matter. He had not been invited, and voted for Hayes and Wheeler. Witness said a portion of the returns laid before the Committee by the Secretary of the Senate were forgeries.

On the 11th, the Committee resumed its investigation on the afternoon of the 10th.

Timothy Griffin, a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, was sworn, and said he had found a paper authorizing Thomas C. Anderson to act as messenger to bring the Louisiana returns to Washington. He produced the paper signed by all the Electors.

Elijah L. Bagley, manager of the Atlantic & Pacific Telegraph Company, was the next witness. Mr. Butler conducted the examination and asked for the production of a certain book containing several telegrams sent to and from Hayes. Witness said he had been unable to produce the book called for because the key to the cipher in which the telegrams were written was missing. Though the writing of the body of the letter and the suggestions were an exact counterpart of his handwriting. The witness was examined in relation to the re-enactment and attaching to the signing of the agreement, and made several other statements as to various points. The testimony of the Sub-Committee was handed witness for identification. SHERIFF ALLES testified, on the 7th, that he knew Huggins but declined to act with them; when Cree and Burman made the canvass, witness thought it was not treating the people right and took every advantage he could for the Republican party, didn't think they made a fair canvass; was not asked to throw out any votes.

William Green testified that he received a summons on the 16th of November, as clerk of the Court, for which he had never made application; was brought before the Board by Huggins, who told witness he wanted him to assist in making the canvass of the county election, which he did; subsequently signed the returns of the Huggins and was the clerk of the election; didn't count it or know its contents; Huggins paid to witness $5 per day for his services. Wm. Wm Lessie, and most fair over a day's work, and the Committee that he paid it out that Hayes would be elected by 2,000 majority; witness had all things right but witness knows that not any returns were wrongful thrown in the return he signed; he would not, but only two clerks appointed by the Board; signed one only, but signed two alike afterwards. An affidavit signed Cecil Lee, J. P., was shown to witness, signed by Green and Alley that the statements of the former were correct; he was sworn to the statements; knows said he did not recollect signing the affidavit, and never knew of the affidavit before.

Alley was recalled, and said he could not recollect signing an affidavit; was employed for a very short part of the time when in canvassing; knows nothing of the affidavit; couldn't be signed the paper of not.

Dixon was testified that he didn't tell witness the canvass had given the county to Democrats; didn't have that impression; was the supposition; had said they couldn't count the votes of Johnsonville and Barbourville; didn't recollect any controversy with Melvin; the reason for throwing out Johnsonville was that the Inspectors had refused to allow one book to be voted; one man only made an affidavit; had told witness he would; witness knew some had been challenged at the polls at Barbourville, and supposed they had no right to vote, although their votes were sworn in; never knew any votes that present were not registered; didn't recollect only six or eight, two of whom did not reside in the county; made no such remark to Grey as "We are beaten, and time now for a new leaf;" witness had received money for expenses in taking returns to Indianapolis, but first refused it; didn't recollect how much money he received altogether; thought it was two dollars from Martin and fifteen dollars from Cannon, and witness didn't suppose nor that the knowledge of the returns of the Barbourville Precinct was according to law; thought at the time it was right.

Myers, Blackburn, Pasco and Rumsey testified the two former that they had sent no telegrams to anybody, and found lost some of them were destructed; could not explain how they became mixed and duplicated. Rumsey testified he told him that the change had been made that some of them were wrong.

Mr. Levissee was recalled and made some corrections in his previous testimony, among which was one denying having told Asher that he would take $30,000 and refuse to accept the Electoral ticket. In reply to an inquiry relative to any further facts concerning the attempts to bribe he stated he had revealed the facts to Pelton, to whom he had spoken at the time of the interview, with a view of finding out who the parties behind them were, also to keep them from attempting to bribe anyone else. He had not the slightest idea who signed his name to the alleged forged returns.

Hon. Thomas W. Ferry testified that he did not receive the first return from Louisiana by messenger, because it appeared to be informal, and not learn that the returns was delivered in due time out on the 4th of March, 1877. Clifford testified that the returns were in counting the votes was the only one received by mail. The witness further testified that in all respects in everything relative he had acted impartially, and did not know many persons who had signed the papers, and when he signed them he did not know that any signatures to any of the Louisiana returns were forged. He had not heard any doubt expressed as to the genuineness of the signatures until within the last four or five weeks. He had not heard of it from the returning board. He thought that the seven returns was received by another messenger.

The Chairman laid before the Committee a letter received from Hon. Stanley Matthews, in which the gentleman declined to appear before the Committee. His reasons were his Senatorial privileges, his sense of duty to the Senate and the fact that a Senatorial investigation into his connection with Louisiana affairs was then pending. Mr. Butler expressed himself as amazed at the course of Senator Matthews, and submitted a resolution that a subpœna be issued to Mr. Matthews, in due form, to summon him to appear before the Committee and testify. Mr. Cox spoke at some length in favor of the adoption of the resolution, as did also Mr. McMahon and Mr. Reed. The resolution was then adopted and the Committee adjourned until the 15th.

THE committee resumed its investigation on the afternoon of the 10th.

Timothy Griffin, a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, was sworn, and said he had found a paper authorizing Thomas C. Anderson to act as messenger to bring the Louisiana returns to Washington. He produced the paper signed by all the Electors.

Mozart's Last Moments.

THERE is something strikingly beautiful and touching in the circumstance of his death. "His sweetest song was the last he sung"—the "Requiem." He had been employed upon this exquisite music for several weeks—his soul filled with inspirations of the richest melody, and already claiming kindred with immortality. After giving it its last touch, and receiving into it the undying spirit of song, which was to consecrate it through all time "as his cygnesan strain," he fell into a gentle and quiet slumber. At length the light footsteps of his daughter Emilie awoke him. "Come hither," said he, "ray Emilie—my task is done—the Requiem is finished." "Say not so dear father," said the little girl, interrupting him, as tears stood in her eyes; "you must be better—you look better, for even now your cheek has a glow upon it. I am sure we will nurse you well again—let me bring you something refreshing." "Do not deceive yourself, my love," said the dying father; "this wasted form can never be restored by human aid. From Heaven's mercy alone do I look for aid in this my dying hour. I was spoken of refreshments, my Emilie—take these, my last notes, sit down by my poem here, sing them with the hymn of thy sainted mother; let me once more hear those notes which have been so long my solacement and delight." Emilie obeyed; and with a voice enriched with tenderest emotion, sung the following stanzas:

"Spirit! thy labor is o'er!
Thy verse of rebellion is run:
Thy steps are now bound for the unbroken floor,
And the race of immortals begun.

Spirit! look not on the strife,
Or the pleasures of earth with regret,
Pause not on the threshold of limitless life,
To mourn for the friends that's met.

Spirit! no fetters are bind,
No wicked have power to molest;
There the weary, like thee, the wretched, shall find
A haven—a mansion of rest.

Spirit! how bright is the road
For which thou art taking the wing.
Thy home it will be with thy Savior and God,
Their loud hallelujahs to sing."

As she concluded, she burst for a moment upon the low, melancholy notes of the piece, and then turning from the instrument, looked in silence for the approving smile of her father. It was the still, passionless smile which the rapt and joyous spirit had left, with the seal of death upon those features.—N. Y. Graphic.

The Warrior in the Police Court.

"Where did you find this red man?" said His Honor, as Officer O'Sullivan brought a native American to the railing.

I found him about three o'clock this morning hanging around the Sixth Navional Bank," said the officer.

"He does not seem to be a long-lost Indian," said His Honor, looking blandly at him. "Perhaps he is one of the Western tribes, been to see the President."

"Ugh! Ugh! Big bounse—heap shine ugh!" said the red man.

"Yes," said His Honor, "he has been to see the President. What are you doing with your war-paint on? Your mission was peaceful."

"Ugh! ugh! Me big warrior—much paint—me kill Custer! ugh!!"

"The deuce you did," said His Honor. "You had better not tell that around Munroe City. Some of his relatives might take a fancy to your scalp lock to set in mourning rings."

"Ugh! ugh! Me eat white baby. Heap starve! red man—must eat something—eat baby! ugh!"

"Officer, bring a bowl of water and let him wash off that nasty paint," said His Honor.

The officer brought a bowl of water and placed it before the Indian.

"Wash your face and hands, His Honor.

"Me no savvy, ugh!" said the Indian.

"I will give you just one minute to wash your face," said His Honor, taking out his watch and placing it on the table.

The Indian stood motionless, looking toward the west.

"Come, come, red man, time flies," said the Judge; "50 seconds gone, and now 58, 59, 60."

The Indian stooped down and commenced washing his face.

"It won't do," said His Honor. "Still Cherokin, you and I are old acquaintances. You can't play big Injun on me. You have been before me three times for burglary. Take him down, officer, and put him in double irons. He's a bad one."—N. Y. Graphic.

Inherited Tricks.

The inheritance of tricks of habit is one of the most perplexing of all the phenomena of heredity. The less striking the habit is memorremarkable, perhaps, is its persistence as an inherited trait. Girou de Buzareingues states that he knew a man who, when he lay on his back, was wont to throw his right leg across the left; one of this person's daughters had the same habit from her birth, constantly assuming that position in the cradle, notwithstanding the restlances offered by the swaddling bands. Darwin mentions another case in his "Variation of Animals and Plants Under Domestication"—a child had the odd habit of setting its fingers in rapid motion whenever it was particularly pleased with anything. When greatly excited, the same child would raise the hand on both sides as high as the eyes, with the fingers in rapid motion as before. Even in old age he experienced a difficulty in refraining from these gestures. He had eight children, one of whom, a little girl, when four years of age, used to set her fingers going, and to lift up her hands after the manner of her father.

A still more remarkable case is described by Galton. A gentleman's wife noticed that when he lay fast asleep on his back in bed he had the curious trick of raising his right arm slowly in front of his face, up to his forehead, and then dropping it with a jerk, so that the wrist fell heavily on the bridge of his nose. The trick did not occur every night, but occasionally, and was independent of any ascertained cause. Sometimes it was repeated incessantly for an hour or more. The gentleman's nose was prominent, and its bridge often become sore from the blows it received. At one time an awkward sore was produced that was long in healing, on account of the recurrence, night after night, of the blows which first caused it. His wife had to remove the button from the wrist of his night-gown, as it made severe scratches, and some months were spent before the habit was overcome. Many years after his death, his son married a lady who had never heard of the family infirmity. She, however, observed precisely the same peculiarity in her husband; but his nose, from not being particularly prominent, has never as yet suffered from the blows. The trick does not occur when he is half-asleep, as, for example, when he is dozing in his armchair; but he says he is sure that it would be apt to begin. It is, as with his father, intermittent; sometimes ceasing for many nights, and sometimes almost incessant for a part of every night. It is performed, as with his father, with his right hand. One of his children, a girl, has inherited the same trick. She performs it, likewise, with the right hand, but in a slightly-modified form; for, after raising the arm, she does not allow the wrist to drop upon the bridge of the nose, but the palm of the half-closed hand falls over and downn the the nose, striking it rather rapidly—a decided improvement on the father's and grandfather's idea. The thick is intermittent in this girl's case also, sometimes not occurring for periods of some months, but sometimes almost incessantly.—Cornhill Magazine.

Gardens for Farmers.

THE idea is somewhat prevalent even among farmers, that the products of the garden require a soil different from that of the farm. This is a mistake; any soil that will grow good crops of corn, hay, wheat or potatoes, will grow good crops of almost any variety of fruit or vegetables, and even more. The higher the cultivation in either case, the more satisfactory will be the crop. What the crop requires to make it profitable, must be decided by his wants or means of culture, though it may be said down, as a general rule, that one-fourth of an acre, or a space 105 by 105 feet, would be ample for the requirements of an ordinary sized family.

For convenience, the kitchen garden should be near the dwelling, and if appearances enter anything into consideration, it would be better placed at the front of the house, than the back one. When there is room to use the plow and harrow in preparing the ground for the garden, it would be well always to do the work more thoroughly than the spade. Even in preparing the ground for our most delicate flowering plants we always use the plow in preference to the spade when it is practicable to do so.

Independent of the pleasure that the farmer may derive from his garden of fruits or flowers, there is no doubt that in many cases it leads to a balance for more profitable than his crops of the farm, in our growing country. Towns and villages spring into existence where a few years before was only an unpeopled waste, and the shop-keeper, mechanic or artisan is glad to buy the surplus the farmer may have to spare on his overflowing garden. This I know to be the fact in scores of instances where the business of agroyerment, market gardener or florist was at it were, forced upon the farmer by his village neighbors desiring to buy the products of his garden. Here is a case somewhat to point: the original proprietor of one of the largest seed houses in the city of New York emigrated from Scotland some time about the beginning of the present century; he was a nailer by trade and was entirely ignorant of anything pertaining to seeds or gardening, but one day coming through the Bowery, then half farm, half city, he saw a rose bush in a cottage window. It was a rose in the wilderness, for probably there were not a score more in the City of New York. He stopped in and bought it for fifty cents, took it home, painted the pot green, and, placing it in the window of his cell apartment, quickly sold it for a dollar. This was easier work and better pay than nail-making, so he started out daily buying plants of all kinds, always paying the pots green. In practice by the way that modern science named this art)—and hardening his money, rapidly. From plants the transition to dealing in seeds was natural and easy, so that in less than twenty years from the time this humble Scotch nailmaker had purchased as first rose bush in the Bowery, his seed house had become the largest on this continent.—Peter Henderson.

THE best dairymen contend that the milk product of a cow can be made worth $75 per annum. This would make the annual product from our 8,000,000 cows yield $600,000,000.—Iowa State Register.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

—To whiten a Panania hat, scrub with borax water and bleach in the sun.

—A bug of hops as large as the two fists, placed in a bin or store of grain, will, it is said, kill or eradicate all grubs and insects from the grain.

—About one pound of copperas (sulphate of iron) at a cost of a few cents, put into a water-closet, will entirely deodorize it; five pounds in a bucket of water, thrown down a cesspool, will have the same effects. There is no unpleasant odor in it, as there is from chloride of lime or carbolic acid. This is worth knowing, especially at this season.

—For washing silver put a half teaspoonful of hartshorn into the suds in which the silver is washed; have the water hot; wash quickly, using a small brush; rinse in hot water and dry with a clean linen towel; then rub very dry with a chamois skin. Washed in this manner, silver becomes very brilliant, and requires no polishing with any of the powders or whiting usually employed, and the silver does not wear out.

—Experiments made under our personal observation have convinced us that carbolic acid gas is fatal to vegetable matter most difficulties of the throat. A little carbolic acid kept in an open dish in a room, or three or four crops on a hot stove three times a week, will be found a powerful destroyer of this which is also beneficial in correcting any acidity that may be present in the soil. Used in a solution of one part of acid to one hundred parts of water, it is a valuable fertilizer, in which tenacious clay soils are often wanting.

—Many measures are to us in the treatment of a tenacious clay soil where sand was used with most excellent results. The place treated was a stiff and nearly impervious clay soil. Not far away on the same farm was a bed of sand. At odd times when the land was plowed in the fall, the sand was hauled and applied to the clay, and when the piece had received about 100 loads it was well distributed by a thorough dragging. It was sown in oats and grass seed the following spring. The results were highly gratifying. The same plan was followed on other fields, varying the crops, until what had been the nearly worthless stiff clay became a fertile clay loam, one of the most productive portions of the farm. Such soils, by this method of treatment, become lasting soils, so to speak, and eminently adapted to the purposes of meadow.

But it is well understood that nothing is so beneficial to a clay soil as underdraining. A certain volume of cultivating such soils tends to form a compact strata just below the depth reached by the plow or spade of the cultivator, and this necessarily acts as a basin to retain the water that sinks through the cultivated or upper strata; and however benefited the methods we have mentioned may prove, the retention of water by the subsoil in a late or backward season must unfavorably effect the crop grown upon such soil. The water prevents the heat of the sun from penetrating below it, and checks the the frost from those of plants that penetrate to it. This difficulty is removed by underdraining. When this is done the subsoil that previously held the water like a liquid tight basin, becomes it like a filter, and as the water descends the air follows it. The rains of autumn, charged with fertilizing elements, readily permeate the soil, the sun warms it, and the roots of the growing plants find the conditions necessary to their vigorous development.—Western Rural.

—In speaking of summer fruits and the evils resulting from their use when unripe or over-ripe, Dr. Tooke in his Monthly says: "The true rule is to use them when they are the most pulpy and when their cells are the most easily broken up by mastication and made soluble by digestion."

Treatment of Heavy Clay Soils.

A reader desires to know the easiest way to improve a stiff clay soil, which is cold and wet, of course, and retains its moisture until it becomes stagnant and sour.

The most effectual way of benefiting such soils is to underdrain them, but in the case referred to, the expense of that method would be too great now to admit of its adoption. The next best plan is to make open drains, where water stands after rains, terminating in a ravine or ditch, so that the water after a rain will rapidly pass off. By this means no inconsiderable quantity of water will be carried off, which would otherwise remain until absorbed by the soil or dissipated by evaporation.

Still clay lands may be benefited greatly by plowing them in the fall. Their adhesiveness is, in this way, greatly ameliorated; beside, the alternate freezing and thawing of the winter season, when they are thus broken up, pulverizes and renders them in fine condition for spring grains without further labor.

Stock soils are also improved by coarse vegetable manures. Corn stalks, straw and similar refuse incorporated by plowing them under, assists in separating the clay and rendering the soil more friable and porous. A valuable aid, also, in accomplishing a like result, is sand in a liberal state of lime, which is also beneficial in correcting any acidity that may be present in the soil. Coal ashes, especially, is a valuable fertilizer, in which tenacious clay soils are often wanting.

These measures are to us the treatment of a tenacious clay soil where sand was used with most excellent results. The piece treated was a stiff and nearly impervious clay soil. Not far away on the same farm was a bed of sand. At odd times when the land was plowed in the fall, the sand was hauled and applied to the clay, and when the piece had received about 100 loads it was well distributed by a thorough dragging. It was sown in oats and grass seed the following spring. The results were highly gratifying. The same plan was followed on other fields, varying the crops, until what had been the nearly worthless stiff clay became a fertile clay loam, one of the most productive portions of the farm. Such soils, by this method of treatment, become lasting soils, so to speak, and eminently adapted to the purposes of meadow.

But it is well understood that nothing is so beneficial to a clay soil as underdraining. A certain volume of cultivating such soils tends to form a compact strata just below the depth reached by the plow or spade of the cultivator, and this necessarily acts as a basin to retain the water that sinks through the cultivated or upper strata; and however benefited the methods we have mentioned may prove, the retention of water by the subsoil in a late or backward season must unfavorably effect the crop grown upon such soil. The water prevents the heat of the sun from penetrating below it, and checks the the frost from those of plants that penetrate to it. This difficulty is removed by underdraining. When this is done the subsoil that previously held the water like a liquid tight basin, becomes it like a filter, and as the water descends the air follows it. The rains of autumn, charged with fertilizing elements, readily permeate the soil, the sun warms it, and the roots of the growing plants find the conditions necessary to their vigorous development.—Western Rural.

—In speaking of summer fruits and the evils resulting from their use when unripe or over-ripe, Dr. Tooke in his Monthly says: "The true rule is to use them when they are the most pulpy and when their cells are the most easily broken up by mastication and made soluble by digestion."

—A man, while fishing recently in Winnipisaukee Lake, N. H., caught a loon which had dived and seized the hook on which a small fish was dangling, so built at the end of a line forty feet long. The bird was secured alive, and will be exhibited at Boston.

The Secret of Business Success.

It is claimed that Vanderbilt exhibited a great nerve and shrewd business sagacity in the purchase of stocks and railroads contended by him. Yet, whenever he made an investment he received its returns as expeditiously either as his own, or as collateral security. Dr. R. V. Pierce has invested over a hundred thousand dollars in advertising, depending entirely upon the superior merits of his goods for securing the unparalleled popularity of his family medicines, and the unusual increase in their sale attests, in argument stronger than words, their purity and efficiency. If the blood be impoverished, the liver sluggish, or there be tumors, blotches and pimples, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will effect a speedy and perfect cure. If the bowels be

Brown dress linen at See & Washburn's.

Smith, the National candidate for Governor, is likely to have an interesting season in explaining the manner in which Smith, the saleratus man, has been ridiculing the Greenbackers in his advertisements, published in the papers throughout the State. Here are some samples. "Smith's saleratus attends strictly to business, and has expansion enough for the whole greenback party." "It makes flour expand like a greenbacker." "Inflation, as a general thing, is attended by a reaction."

Brick Pomeroy is a demi-god among the lasting Greenbackers of Charlevoix county. They swear by him, and repeat his words as so much wisdom from the source of all wisdom. Here is what he says in a late number of his paper:

"In the organization of Greenback Clubs we counsel every able bodied member of these organizations to become as proficient as possible in the manual of arms. In time of peace it is well to prepare for war. In every greenback club there should be a drill master—that is, in every club whose members are brave enough to stand at all times, under all circumstances, to defend their rights as citizens. We, the people, are in rebellion against the untaxed usurpatory at this country. We, the people, propose to have our rights, peaceably and by means of the ballot, if possible—by the bayonet if we must."

The last piece of iron constructing the frme work of the new capitol, at Lansing, was raised and bolted in place at noon on the 15th. A small evergreen tree was fastened at the top of the mast, and the stars and stripes were run up amidst cheering. The flag waves at an altitude of two hundred and sixty five feet.

The New Orleans Times says that if another war comes, the Southern cavalry will put an end to the strife, and when it is over, "they will water their horses in the waters of the great Northern lakes." This was the intent of the Southern cavalry a few years ago; but they got into so much hot water before they reached the lakes that the project was abandoned.

This is the declaration of a leader in the Greenback party movement who has issued circulars to more than three thousand of the clubs, or "councils," as some call them:

"Now if this bond-holding contract is not canceled, closed, and the debt paid in greenbacks, let it be paid in bayonets. If the holders of these claims against the United States want metal instead of money, to God's name let them have it."

That is the kind of stuff published in in the most prominent greenback organs of the Northwest.

U. S. to Allen Brown, 80 acres in South Arm.

COTTAGES AT THE RESORT.—On Wednesday, H. W. Page, F. W. Wilson, and Prof. Brooks, of Kalamazoo, arrived here, and they have caused the first blow to be struck on the grounds of the Charlevoix Summer Resort. Five cottages have been commenced, and all our builders and other wise engaged, are busy in their construction. The cottages now being erected are to be 14x22, 16 feet post, with three rooms, and piazza. They are to be plain but neat and airy. There is no doubt in that more than the number mentioned will be erected this summer, and other improvements made upon the grounds.

ACQUITTED.—Prosecuting Attorney Green was called to Boyne Falls last week to prosecute one Michael Doyle, for the alleged larceny of a pigeon hole from Wm. Custer. Doyle was acquitted, because in the evidence it was proven that a partnership existed between the complainant and defendant, in the use of the said pigeon hole.

MORTARE.—Brother Rose, of Petoskey Democrat in describing Fort Mackinaw calls it "Fort Holmes." The latter fort is an old fortified hill in the interior of the Island in a very commanding position, and was used before the present fort was built. Post yourself up, Rose.

It is a serious question with some of our young men whether they can raise a moustache and be attentive pupils in a juvenile Sunday school class at the same time without compromising their bonding manhood. It is a question of whether they will cease nurturing the fur on their upper lip or go into the bible class.

C. J. PAILTHORP, of Petoskey, has been appointed U. S. Commissioner for the Western District of Michigan. Although Pailthorp is a Democrat, it is an appointment with which men of all parties in this section will be satisfied. He is eminently well qualified, and quite honest for a Democrat.

HE'S ROLLED ON DETLIFF, the wife-beater, one day last week, and found him very recent, but evidently not dying from the knowing of a guilty conscience. He eats heartily and seems to enjoy life, as well as the best of us.

We again call the attention of capitalists to the extraordinary inducements offered here for a flouring mill. A large extent of country to the South and East of Charlevoix, which now takes rank among the best developed farming sections of northern Michigan, produces annually a large amount of grain which begs for a market. To the north a fertile stretch of country suffers from the same necessity. Such an investment would prove a profitable one even now, and the future promises productive results.

White pique only 10cts per yard at our store. Fox, Rose & Butters.

THE editors of Northern Michigan are to hold a Convention at Traverse City on the 15th of this month. The propeller City of Traverse has been tendered for an excursion to Mackinac, and the Clam Bellc to take the scribblers to some of the fruit farms of the peninsula. We shall probably be unable to attend, but we shall think of our editorial brethren on that day with a heart full of longings for the pleasures which such gatherings always furnish.

What Charlevoix County Wants.

It wants manufactories. This county will never become rich until manufactories make it rich. We suppose that in one sense it is a rich county—say, we know it is rich in resources. But they will be lost little because undeveloped, and they will be developed slowly until we have manufactories.

There would enable us to keep money that we send away every year for the manufacture of our crude material. We are only producers, and what we produce is of but little value to us because we lack consumers.

Now, manufactories—not merely sawmills, but flouring-mills, furniture and stave factories—will give us the benefit of every fifty cents in the grain and the timber, sent at the same time furnish consumers for our agricultural products right here at home. We export too much crude material. It wants "dignifying" here, before shipment, where its substance, and all its substance, will circulate throughout the veins of our system, and invigorate every part of our business life.

We import too much at high rates, and export too much at low rates. Farm produce of all kinds is very cheap, money scarce and the rate of interest on what there is usuriously exhorbitant.

With an additional force of laborers in our villages the demand for all the products of the farm and garden would be enormously increased, and a good home market created. Money would soon become plentiful, and new industries would become featured and established. The agricultural producers are producers as well as consumers, and they with the laborers will make of any county with such bountiful resources as ours a rich country. Let us do all in our power to bring about the desired result.

THEY HAVE already found a Tweed in the Grand Rapids city government, which is controlled by the Nationals. The new party are going to purify matters, you know. They have made a rather doubtful beginning at Grand Rapids.

PERSONAL.—Mrs. Capt. Mike Kelloe, of Chicago, an old time resident of Charlevoix, is in town visiting friends.

—Mrs. A. J. Stroud, and her father, Mr. M. P. Norton, of Norton's Bay, left for re Thursday for Bercn, Ohio, where they will remain a few weeks.

—Mrs W. P. Elson returned home from Wisconsin Thursday.

Mrs. McClanathan who has for the past two years taught the Intermediate department of our village school left yesterday for Big Rapids for a two month's sojourn. The School Board here have tendered her the position for another year, and she will return.

MARINE.—The Agnes, a private steam yacht, owned by one Townsend, a sporting Memphis cotton broker, who is also aboard with his family, was in port Sunday, on its way to Mackinac. Capt. Bullock, of Milwaukee, accompanies the party. On their way back, they will stop here and fish the Jordan.

—The steamer M. W. Wright came up Sunday with a party of Little Traverse and Petoskey excursionists.

—Cleared with cargoes during week. Schooners Emma, Fleetwing, Belle, scows Nellie Winlark, Blue Belle, Julia Smith. Now in port, schooners Leo Higby, Wescott, scows Prince and Alaska.

—A Port Huron steamer is expected to take the route between Petoskey and Northport soon.

—The steamer Van Raalte is guaranteed $75 per day by the railroad company for running between Petoskey and Mackinac. That's what we call a soft thing.

—The tug Minter left here on Wednesday for Bangstuck, whence she came.

Large lots of new goods just received at Carpenter & Bartholomew's. Don't forget to call and see them. Everything selling at rock bottom prices.

General News Summary.

CONGRESS.

A large number of bills were passed in the Senate, on the 11th, among which were—to provide for the sale of portions of the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation; to amend, providing for the publication of notices of intention to enter agricultural lands under the homestead and pre-emption laws. The River and Harbor Appropriation bill was further considered, and a large number of amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was passed—35 to 21. The Deficiency Appropriation bill was reported from committee, without amendment, and by the House the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, and a large number of amendments to the bill were disposed of.

Bills were passed in the Senate, on the 12th—House bill making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the Commissioners of Claims under the act of Congress of March 3, with amendments; also for the payment of claims allowed under the Act known as the Southern Claims Commission; the Indian Appropriation bill, without amendments. The Conference report on the Postoffice Appropriation bill was agreed to. The bill to repeal a part or all of Peter Cooper was presented and referred, providing for the repeal of the Specie Resumption act, and recommending against the proposed adjournment of Congress until many legislative measures for financial relief should be passed. The House joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law was after discussion, postponed till December next—35 to 25. . . . In the House, a Conference Committee was appointed on the Session Award bill. A message was received from the President recommending an appropriation for a Commission on the part of the United States in the International Monetary Conference. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was further considered, and passed as a whole.

The House bill to restore certain lands in Iowa to settlement under the Homestead law, and for other purposes, was passed in the Senate on the 13th. The bill to repeal the Specie Resumption act was taken up, and the amendment of Senator Morrill—to strike out the clause providing that the act shall not be construed to authorize the payment of gold—which provides that from and after the passage of the bill United States notes shall be received the same as coin in payment of 5-per-cent bonds, and that on and after Jan. 1, next, said notes shall be receivable for duties on imports. In the House, the Conference report on the Postoffice Appropriation bill was agreed to. The Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was finally passed, with several amendments.

In the Senate, on the 14th, the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported adversely on the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution forbidding the distinction of persons on account of sex. The House joint resolution asking for an investigation in the case of Henry C. Shaughnessy, confined in an English prison, was agreed to. Bills were passed creating a "Board of Audit," as the Pacific Railroad Commission; House bill to amend the pension of certain invalid soldiers and sailors who have lost both hands, both feet, or the sight of both eyes in the service of the country, from fifty to seventy-two dollars a month. The amendments to the River and Harbor and the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bills were passed upon, and Conference Committees were appointed. In the House, the Senate amendments to the River and Harbor bill were non-concurred in, and a Conference Committee was appointed. A preamble and resolution were offered by Mr. Burchard, and adopted—38 to 21—declaring that the act of the Forty-fourth Congress in counting and declaring the result of the Presidential election was unconstitutional, and declaring that no subsequent Congress has jurisdiction to go behind the returns, and that all persons who assist in attempting to overthrow or disregard such action or title would be revolutionary and in disregard of the law. A Senate report was made by the Judiciary Committee and adopted—24 to 15—declaring also that neither the Courts of the United States, nor any other tribunal than Congress, can review the action of the electoral power in declaring the result of the last Presidential election.

In the Senate, on the 15th, the concurrent resolution of the House, extending the session of Congress until four p. m., on the 19th, was agreed to. A report was made in the case of Senator Grover to the effect that the evidence before the Committee on Privileges and Elections did not sustain any of the charges that his election was procured by fraud and bribery. William E. Spencer, for many years the Journal Clerk, was chosen Chief Clerk of the Senate, vice William J. Mcdonald, deceased. The House bill to provide for the expenses of the Electoral Commission on alleged frauds in the late Presidential election, appropriating $20,000 for that purpose, was amended by adding $20,000 for the Senate investigation, and $10,000 to be used under the direction of the Attorney-General in defray any expenses that may be incurred by the Department of Justice for the defense of any crimes committed against the United States in the affairs or in the course of the investigation mentioned in the act, and the bill as amended was passed. The Conference reports on the Army and on the River and Harbor Appropriation bills were agreed to. The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was reported. A petition of Peter Cooper was presented and referred, praying for the repeal of the Specie Resumption act, and recommending against the proposed adjournment of Congress until many legislative measures for financial relief should be passed. The House joint resolution to provide for the enforcement of the Eight-Hour law was after discussion, postponed till December next—35 to 25. . . . DOMESTIC.

Dennis Donnelly expiated by hanging, on the 11th, at Pottsville, Pa., his crime of murder. This was the fifteenth of the "Mollie Maguire" executions.

The Government officials at Chicago report the wide distribution of counterfeit quarters of the new design. They are made of German silver, washed with quicksilver, and have a greasy feeling.

The picnic of the Chicago Comanches, which for some time had caused anxiety and apprehension in Chicago and elsewhere, passed off quietly on the 13th. An immense crowd was in attendance, but exceptional quiet prevailed.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

At Trinity Church, in New York City, on the 11th, Rev. Dr. George Seymour was duly consecrated Bishop of the Diocese of Quincy, Ill. Nine Bishops participated in the ceremonies.

William Cullen Bryant, the venerable poet and editor, died at his home, in New York City, on the morning of the 12th. He was in the eighty-fourth year of his age.

The Republican State Convention of Illinois has been called to meet at St. Paul, on the 4th of September.

The Republicans of Ohio held their State Convention, at Cincinnati, on the 13th. Judge William White was nominated for Justice of the Supreme Court, Milton Barnes for Secretary of State, and George Paul for Commissioner of the Board of Public Works. The platform adopted reaffirms the principles of the Republican party; opposes the further 4-per-cent refunding at this time, of the same as being as injurious to business and devoid of other than evil results, extends cordial greeting to such citizens of the South as adhere, in good faith, to the terms on which the issues of the war were settled; favors a tariff for revenue, so adjusted as to secure incidental protection to home industry; endorses the investigation recently inaugurated by the lower house of Congress as a revolutionary movement really designed as an attack upon the President's title, and calculated to Mexicanize the affairs of the country, to cause general distrust, and aggravate and prolong the distress of the laboring and industrial classes; recognizes in the administration of President Hayes the highest integrity and patriotism, the most sincere effort to promote political purity and harmony, and secure general business prosperity throughout the whole country, etc., etc.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate decided, on the 13th, to report adversely upon the joint resolution proposing a Constitutional amendment to provide for woman suffrage.

The Matthews Senate Investigating Committee met on the 13th. Senator Matthews was present. A note was received from Senator Potter Committee stating that it was necessary that Mr. Anderson should be present during the day's session of that committee. A recess was then taken.

A call has been issued for the meeting of the Colorado State Republican Convention, at Denver, on the 17th of August next.

The Republican State Convention of Michigan was held at Detroit, on the 13th. Ex-Senator Chandler was chosen Permanent President. The nominations are: For Governor, Chas. M. Croswell (present incumbent); Lieutenant-Governor, Alonzo Sessions (present incumbent); Secretary of State, Wm. Jenny, Jr.; Treasurer, Geo. D. B. Pritchard; Auditor, W. J. Latimer; Land Commissioner, James M. Nesmith; Member of State Board of Education, George T. Edwards; Attorney-General, Otto Kirchner; Superintendent of Public Instruction, H. R. Tarbell. The State Central Committee was constituted as follows: First District, Jas. McMillan, Dr. D. O. Farrand; Second, T. S. Applegate, M. Beal; Third, Jas. O'Donnell, D. B. Auger; Fourth, C. W. Clisbee, H. S. Sleeper; Fifth, L. W. Heath, Chauncey Davis; Sixth, W. S. George, Calvin Wilcox; Seventh, Edward Weeks, Richard Winsor; Eighth, I. A. Fancher, T. C. Phillips; Ninth, Geo. A. Mitchell, J. H. Chandler. Hon. Zachariah Chandler is made Chairman of this committee by acclamation. The following platform was adopted:

The Republican party of Michigan, after twenty years of unbroken control of the State Government is all the more entitled to the full measure of confidence in the manner in which their great responsibilities have been discharged, and they point with satisfaction and pride to that financial policy which has been pursued by the State administration for the happiness and security of the people, the prosperity of the Commonwealth, and the maintenance of public faith.

Resolved, That we again enunciate an undoubted faith that in the honest judgment of the American people, and of the Republican party will furnish, both in its patriotism and intelligence, a full guarantee that the honor of the nation will be preserved, and that we will not only maintain, but will ask an explanation of Russia, and if the answer should be unsatisfactory, would address a solemn protest to the Powers.

M. Muir & Sons, grain merchants, of Glasgow, Scotland, failed on the 12th. Liabilities, $800,000.

Address to the Socialistic Labor Party.

CINCINNATI, June 14.

The following circular was issued, to-day, by the National Executive Committee of the Socialistic Labor party:

To All Sections and Members of the Socialistic Labor Party:

The National Executive Committee has been informed that a few of our party members have associated themselves into industry organizations in several localities, incorporated thereto chiefly by a mistaken apprehension that such a course is necessary to the protection of their rights as Socialists. The party administration would not dump it any part of their duty to interfere with such action were it not attempted by these militant organizations to secure recognition at the hands of the Socialistic Labor party, and that it is possible in some instances that such organizations may have had the countenance and encouragement of the local brethren. Inasmuch as our warrant for such organizations can be found in the platform or Constitution of the party, the proceedings of either the party conferences and acts of the Executive Committee or Board of Supervision, the said organizations are rejected by the Executive Committee as unsupporting, like a cancer, and hostile to the principles and policy of the Socialistic Labor party, whether so declared or not.

We therefore request all party members to withdraw from such associations, and strongly urge all Sections to avoid any official connection with such bodies, and that no arms be carried in the name of the party. Members handled with arms insist upon joining our Armed Sections, and those who wander from the ranks of such Sections are advised to compel compliance with their orders.

The National Executive Committee.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 28, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The stupendous engineering operations incident to the building of the Brooklyn bridge have been carried on with wonderful success and safety, the first serious accident for two years or more occurring last week, when one of the strands belonging to the four great cables was being put in place. This strand was something like half a mile long, reaching from Brooklyn to the New York anchorage, and weighed about forty tons. It had been made fast at Brooklyn end, drawn up in safety over the Brooklyn pier, across the river over the New York pier, and was just about to be finally attached at the New York anchorage, when one of the wire ropes of the hoisting apparatus parted. Then, in the words of an eye witness, "with a roar like that of an immense cannon the strand sprang like a great snake away back into the air, up towards the pier tower on the edge of the river, with a cloud of dust. For a moment the whole platform of granite quivered under the terrible recoil and then the strand sagged between the towers, its middle burying itself in the river with a long white splash, throwing the water up like a submarine explosion in all directions all the way across. Fortunately, the river was clear, and the only damage done was the wetting of a ferry-boat which was passing at the time. The spring of the wire carried it clear over the houses in the 900 feet interval up to the pier, off telegraph poles. Two men who were engaged in the work were struck by the flying monster and hurled into eternity. It seemed almost a miracle that such an accident could occur without greater loss of life, especially as upon the end of the strand dangled a mass of iron weighing nearly a ton; but the very immensity of the force rendered the occurrence so slightly destructive by jerking this resistless missile clean over the houses and streets between the anchorage and the river. Had the impetus been less and the ponderous mass been allowed to drop to the earth instead of taking this gigantic leap, the destruction which it might have wrought is terrible to imagine.

In the Brooklyn Police Court was witnessed last week the closing scene of a brief but spirited drama combining romance, comedy and pathos. On the day previous a young lady of twenty was walking along one of the avenues of that city when she suddenly felt her pocket-book taken from her hand and turning about saw a man making off with it. Being a girl of spirit, she incontinently gave chase; but after running several blocks she found that the object of her pursuit was widening the distance between them. Seeing a butcher's cart standing by the sidewalk she jumped in, whipped up, and after brief but exciting race overhauled the culprit. He was quite inoffensive looking man of middle age with nothing of the thief in his appearance, and when interrogated by the girl as to the cause of his crime broke completely down, saying that he had gone almost crazy at watching his wife and two little children starve and that he had taken the pocket-book in a fit of momentary desperation. Said the young lady in court next day, "When he told me how his family were suffering, I went with him to his house, and found it just as he stated. He took his little child on his knee and cried, and his wife could not imagine what it was all about. He did not want me to tell her, but he finally told her himself that he had taken my pocket-book. I then gave her part of my money. Then the officers came and I told them I did not wish to make any complaint against him, and would not have come here if I had not been compelled to." There were applause and tears a plenty from the court-room audience that morning. The prepossessing appearance of the sorely tempted prisoner and the heart-breaking story of his sufferings from sickness and absolute penury which was told by his fair advocate with earnest simplicity, worked strongly even upon the judge, whose daily experiences are such as to render him proof against any ordinary displays of emotion.

The charge upon which the man had been committed was a grave one, that of highway robbery; and had it not been for the girl's effective pleading a long imprisonment must have followed. But so persistent was she that a consultation was had with the district attorney and his consent obtained to a change of the record, which enabled the judge to discharge the grateful prisoner, who, I am happy to say, found friends at once, and is in no further danger of want. The heroine of the affair has since received complimentary letters from all quarters for her humane and spirited conduct.

There was a piece of quick railroad building done in Brooklyn the other night. A company had a charter to build a rapid-transit road from Fulton Ferry right through the heart of the city the only condition being that a mile of the road should be built within a certain time. This time, after having been several times extended by the Legislature, was about to expire, and a very valuable franchise to become lost. So the company collected some four hundred workmen and sufficient material, conveyed them quietly to the spot after nightfall, and commenced work. When the astonished residents along the route awoke the next morning there lay a mile of track, tier, rails, and joints all complete, and the new rapid-transit line had thus, in the night, become a fixed fact.
